

LIBRARY

127 171

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

•

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND AND DELAWARE

•

THIS LIMITED EDITION HAS BEEN PRINTED FROM TYPE AND THE TYPE DISTRIBUTED

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND AND DELAWARE

BY JOHN MARTIN HAMMOND

WITH SIXTY-FIVE ILLUSTRATIONS

PHILADELPHIA & LONDON
J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

1914

COPYRIGHT, 1914, BY J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER, 1914

PRINTED BY J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY AT THE WASHINGTON SQUARE PRESS
PHILADELPHIA, U. S. A.

---

PREFACE

---

SOME people collect old furniture, some old books. I for many years have been a collector of old houses within easy travelling distance of my home in Baltimore, and the best of my finds are to be found in this book. He who would collect old houses must possess much enthusiasm, a determination that will not be discouraged, and a fine power of walking. Fully one-half of the points that he visits because of hearsay will be found to be without interest, and of the others that he picks out only a few insignificant facts will at first be ascertainable. A continual source of surprise to one who searches for colonial homes is how little is known about them even in the immediate neighborhood in which they have stood for so many years.

The material in this book has been gathered from personal visits and studies at first hand of the houses described. Much of the literary matter has come from private papers and from the recollections of the older generation of the descendants of builders of Maryland and Delaware mansions. The photographs I have made myself. I wish to make acknowledgment of inspiration and help gained from certain indefatigable workers in history, whose researches have gone into almost every nook of the field in Maryland and Delaware. Any one who delves into Maryland archives will be sure to come across the path of Mrs. Hester Dorsey Richardson, one of the first authorities on Maryland genealogy. Much of the available data of the history of Maryland and Delaware will be found in the voluminous writings of John Thomas Scharff, particularly in his "History of Maryland" and his "History of Delaware." No more complete sectional history was ever published than Joshua D. Warfield's "Founders of Howard and Anne Arundel Counties." The annals of Southern Maryland have been gathered together and told in a most scholarly fashion by James Walter Thomas in "Chronicles of Saint Mary's County."

---

PREFACE

---

In the making of this book I have had certain definite ends. I wished to call attention, first, to the many beautiful colonial survivals to be found in Maryland and Delaware. Then through the photography and reproduction of certain architectural details (such as, in particular, doorways), I have hoped to bring suggestion to those about to build homes of the present day. Finally I have laid some stress on family history that the descendants of old families in the two States might feel an especially close drawing to these shrines of the life of yesterday.

The work of gathering together the photographs and data presented in the following pages has meant much tramping, buggy riding and boating, the first a no light task with a fifteen pound camera, but it has been a labor of love. I wish to acknowledge the valuable assistance of my friend, Michael Warner Hewes, Jr., in the preparation of several of my chapters, particularly those relating to Eastern Shore points.

CONTENTS

MARYLAND

	PAGE
CHASE HOUSE.....ANNAPOLIS.....	15
FAMILIES: CHASE, LLOYD, HARWOOD, RIDOUT
HAMMOND or HARWOOD HOUSE..ANNAPOLIS.....	27
FAMILIES: HAMMOND, PINKNEY, CHASE, LOCKERMAN, HARWOOD
PACA HOUSE.....ANNAPOLIS.....	36
FAMILIES: PACA, SCHAAF, NETH, BLAND, KENNEDY, SWANN
BRICE HOUSE.....ANNAPOLIS.....	45
FAMILIES: BRICE, STEPHEN, MARTIN, ROBB
RIDOUT HOUSE.....ANNAPOLIS.....	60
FAMILY: RIDOUT
SCOTT HOUSE.....ANNAPOLIS.....	68
FAMILIES: SCOTT, KEY, BIRNEY, CLAUDE, SISTERS OF MERCY, SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME
BORDLEY or RANDALL HOUSE...ANNAPOLIS.....	72
FAMILIES: BORDLEY, RANDALL
WHITEHALL.....SANDY POINT, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY.....	77
FAMILIES: SHARPE, RIDOUT, STORY
MONTPELIER .....LAUREL, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY.....	83
FAMILIES: SNOWDEN, JENKINS, TAYLOR, BLAKEMAN, PENDLETON, VON SCHRADER.
OAKLANDS.....CONTEE STATION, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY.....	96
FAMILIES: SNOWDEN, CONTEE, BOLLING, HOOFF
BURLEIGH.....HOWARD COUNTY.....	105
FAMILY: HAMMOND
DOUGHOREGAN MANOR.....HOWARD COUNTY.....	110
FAMILY: CARROLL
HAMPTON.....BALTIMORE COUNTY.....	131
FAMILY: RIDGELY

---

CONTENTS

---

TULIP HILL.....	WEST RIVER, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY.....	138
FAMILIES: GALLOWAY, MAXCEY, MARROE, HUGHES, MURRAY, PARKER
CEDAR PARK.....	WEST RIVER, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY.....	144
FAMILIES: GALLOWAY, SPRIGG, MERCER, MURRAY
RATCLIFFE MANOR.....	NEAR EASTON, TALBOT COUNTY.....	148
FAMILIES: HOLLYDAY, GIBSON, HATHAWAY
WYE HOUSE.....	TALBOT COUNTY.....	152
FAMILY: LLOYD
READBOURNE.....	QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY.....	161
FAMILIES: HOLLYDAY, PERRY
BELMONT.....	HOWARD COUNTY.....	166
FAMILIES: DORSEY, HANSON
MOUNT AIRY.....	CROOME, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY.....	184
FAMILIES: CALVERT, DEVAL
BELAIR.....	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY..	199
FAMILIES: OGLE, ROWIE, WOODWARD
BLAKEFORD.....	QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY.....	203
FAMILIES: DeCOURCY, BLAKE, WRIGHT, THOM
BLOOMINGDALE.....	QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY.....	211
FAMILIES: HARRIS, WALLIS, DUDLEY
MONTMORENCI.....	BALTIMORE COUNTY.....	216
FAMILIES: WORTHINGTON, CONRAD, LEHR
BELVOIR.....	ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY....	219
FAMILIES: ROSS, MAYNARD, WORTHINGTON, POLYANSEI
PLAIN DEALING.....	TALBOT COUNTY.....	223
FAMILIES: CHAMBERLAINE, LOCKERMAN, HARRICASTE
BEVERLY.....	SOMERSET COUNTY.....	231
FAMILY: DENNIS

---

CONTENTS

---

SOTTERLY.....	ST. MARY'S COUNTY.....	235
FAMILIES: BOWLES, PLATER, BRISCOE, SATTERLEE
DEEP FALLS.....	ST. MARY'S COUNTY.....	240
FAMILY: THOMAS

DELAWARE

AMSTEL HOUSE.....	NEW CASTLE.....	247
FAMILIES: VAN DYKE, MOODY, BURNHAM, HAY
DICKINSON HOUSE.....	KENT COUNTY.....	251
FAMILIES: DICKINSON, LOGAN
KENSEY JOHNS HOUSE.....	NEW CASTLE.....	255
FAMILIES: JOHNS, STOCKTON, MOORE
LOOCKERMAN HOUSE.....	DOVER.....	257
FAMILIES: LOOCKERMAN, BRADFORD, CULBRETH
READ HOUSE.....	NEW CASTLE.....	264
FAMILIES: READ, COUPER, SMITH
RIDGELY HOUSE.....	DOVER.....	266
FAMILY: RIDGELY
STEWART HOUSE.....	NEW CASTLE.....	291
FAMILIES: VAN DYKE, DU PONT, JANVIER, LAMBSON, STEWART
THOMAS HOUSE.....	NEW CASTLE.....	293
FAMILIES: THOMAS, READ, THOMAS

---

ILLUSTRATIONS

---

MARYLAND

	PAGE
WHITEHALL ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY
EXTERIOR . . . . .	Frontispiece
ST. PAUL'S RECTORY BALTIMORE
EXTERIOR . . . . .	6
STEMMER HOUSE BALTIMORE COUNTY
EXTERIOR . . . . .	10
CHASE HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
ENTRANCE . . . . .	16
SHUTTER CARVING . . . . .	18
PALLADIAN WINDOW . . . . .	22
HAMMOND HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
ENTRANCE . . . . .	30
SOFA OF AMERICAN EMPIRE PERIOD . . . . .	32
PACA HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
EXTERIOR . . . . .	40
BRICE HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
MANTEL IN DRAWING-ROOM . . . . .	46
EXTERIOR . . . . .	50
RIDGOUT HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
ENTRANCE . . . . .	64
SCOTT HOUSE ANNAPOLIS
EXTERIOR . . . . .	68
ENTRANCE HALL . . . . .	70
WHITEHALL ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY
FROM THE GARDEN . . . . .	78
ENTRANCE TO PARLOUR . . . . .	80
ENTRANCE, INTERIOR CARVING . . . . .	82
MONTPELIER PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
REAR VIEW . . . . .	90
SUMMER HOUSE . . . . .	94
GARDEN . . . . .	94

ILLUSTRATIONS

OAKLANDS	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
CHINA CUPBOARD.....		98
STAIRWAY.....		98
BURLEIGH	HOWARD COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		100
GARDEN ENTRANCE.....		108
DOUGHOREGAN	HOWARD COUNTY
FROM THE REAR.....		114
GARDEN ENTRANCE.....		120
HOMEWOOD	BALTIMORE
EXTERIOR.....		122
HAMPTON	BALTIMORE COUNTY
CENTRAL PORTION.....		132
CUPOLA.....		134
SPRING HILL	HOWARD COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		134
TULIP HILL	ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY
ENTRANCE.....		138
GARDEN ENTRANCE.....		140
HALL AND STAIR.....		142
RATCLIFFE	TALBOT COUNTY
SHELL CUPBOARD.....		148
ALCOVE WINDOW.....		148
GARDEN ENTRANCE.....		150
FROM THE GARDEN.....		150
BELMONT	HOWARD COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		168
ENTRANCE.....		174
MOUNT AIRY	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		188
RIVERDALE	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		192
MOUNT AIRY	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
FIREPLACE IN DINING-ROOM.....		196
THE SIDINGBOARD.....		196

---

ILLUSTRATIONS

---

BELAIR	PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
CENTRAL PORTION.....		200
FROM THE TERRACE.....		202
MAIN STAIRWAY.....		202
BLAKEFORD	QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY
ALL-THE-YEAR-ROUND SUMMER HOUSE.....		206
FROM THE EAST.....		206
BLOOMINGDALE	QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		212
SIDE PORCH.....		214
STEMMER HOUSE	BALTIMORE COUNTY
GARDEN ENTRANCE.....		214
MONTMORENCY	BALTIMORE COUNTY
EXTERIOR.....		216
THE WINDING STAIR.....		216
PARLOUR CORNER.....		216
BELVOIR	ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY
ENTRANCE.....		220
FROM THE SOUTH.....		222
DELAWARE
AMSTEL HOUSE	NEW CASTLE
ENTRANCE.....		248
KENSEY JOHNS HOUSE	NEW CASTLE
EXTERIOR.....		254
RODNEY HOUSE	NEW CASTLE
EXTERIOR.....		256
LOCKERMAN HOUSE	DOVER
THE STAIRWAY.....		260
A CORNER CUPBOARD.....		260
RIDGELY HOUSE	DOVER
EXTERIOR.....		268
FROM THE GARDEN.....		272
PARLOUR CORNER.....		280
THOMAS HOUSE	NEW CASTLE
ENTRANCE.....		292

---

INTRODUCTION

---

THE scattered survivals of the colonial era of home building in Maryland and Delaware have certain great similarities of construction, but they are more closely bound together by ties of blood than by architectural detail. The colonial mansions of the latter little Commonwealth show decided evidence of Dutch influence in their construction, while those of the former present probably as pure examples as will be found of the English adaptation of the classic motive in building, which forms the backbone of the Georgian school. Side by side however, geographically speaking, the eastern shore of Maryland and the whole of little Delaware being isolated by the Delaware and Chesapeake bays, the two States are very closely connected genealogically. The Ridgely, Loockermann, and Johns families, to mention only a few, have branches in both States and have been conspicuous in the history of each.

One great distinction between the colonial homes of Maryland and Delaware relates to the comparatively unimportant matter of size. The homes of Maryland are of much bolder conception than those of Delaware. There are many reasons for this, but on the surface it is apparent that Delaware, with its unsettled early days—founded by the Dutch, wrangled over by the Swedes, and finally wrested from both of these nationalities by the strong hand of the English—would not attract as wealthy a class of settler as Maryland, nor would its people spring from a stock with as imperative a tradition of luxurious living as those of the cavalier life in the Southern State. In point of charm and historic interest, however, one finds as much to please the imagination and the eye in the homes of Delaware as in those of any other State of the Union.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

A characteristic architectural development of colonial Maryland is the wing. This is not typical of the colonial homes of Delaware. Maryland was essentially a slave-holding and tobacco-growing colony and the wing was a creation designed to meet the double demand for a place to house the house-servants near at hand and for an office close to the dwelling-house from which to conduct the affairs of the plantation. At first these demands were met by a small isolated structure close to the big house. Then came a covered passageway from the house. Finally the wing as a concrete part of the whole became an accepted convention.

In both Maryland and Delaware, as well as Pennsylvania, brick was the favorite material used for building. Incidentally in New England frame was usual. Yet stone and brick were plentiful in New England, and wood in Maryland and Pennsylvania. Just why there should be this characteristic and undeniable difference in choice of building stuff is one of those things "no fellow hopes to know." Temperamental variances would seem to be a better explanation, even though a somewhat ambiguous one, than an attempt to blame it on the climate; for wood is certainly a less appropriate building stuff for a cold northerly climate than stone.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

The homes of Maryland and Delaware were always built on a navigable water-course and usually with the front of the house toward the water. There were good reasons for this. Our ancestors did not have good roads and they were not especially fond of walking. Again the water-courses were safer routes of travel than the forests where hostile savages might do mischief. As late as 1750, indeed, the fear of Indian attack had not left Annapolis, the capital of Maryland. Follow the Delaware up from the Atlantic and diverge into almost any of the tributaries of this body fifty miles or so above its mouth, and you will find the colonial houses of Delaware. Penetrate into southern Maryland by the Patuxent or go up the Severn upon which Annapolis was situated and in these reaches of land will be found the colonial mansions of Maryland.

The period of fine home building in Maryland and Delaware extended from about 1735 to the end of the eighteenth century. It was not until the beginning of this stretch of time that a really wealthy class had been developed in either of the two colonies. Now the planter came into his own. His acres were a "going concern," a concern that probably paid larger dividends in proportion than the great bulk of those commercial ventures which have been born in the present day. His own work was little more than casual supervision; two or three months in the year he would devote to the planting and the cutting, and the rest of the time was his own, overseers taking the mass of small details from his shoulders. It was at this time that he began to build himself a beautiful home, that Annapolis in Maryland and Dover and New Castle in Delaware became social capitals, and that the lawyer class—made up chiefly of leisured men—attained that brilliance of forensic and intellectual achievement which was characteristic of the bar of these two States before the Revolution.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

The typical Maryland colonial mansion, using this word to mean a pretentious dwelling, was a large central building with wings, surrounded by a number of smaller dwellings for servants and overseers. It was usually two stories in height and occasionally, though very rarely, three, and it was made after designs sent from London.

This interesting question as to who were the architects of the Maryland and Delaware houses has received investigation from the late T. Henry Randall, of the Randall House, Annapolis, Maryland, an aged man at his death several years ago, an architect himself, and a life-long resident in the traditions of the aristocratic ancient city, and his opinion expressed several times in his writings and in his conversation coincided with the last sentence above. The planter was his own architect and builder, securing his plans from good authorities in England and patiently and carefully following them after they were secured. The reputation for smartness and fashionableness of Annapolis just before the Revolution drew to it some architects from the other side of the water, but they were never numerically a large class. A book of designs from which many of the old doorways and interior details of the mansions of Maryland and Delaware were evidently copied is to be found, among other places, in the British Museum in London and bears the title, "The British Architects or Builders Treasury, by Abraham Swan, Architect. London, MDCCVII." It was from such sources as this that our forefathers drew their inspirations.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

Even in the town houses in Annapolis, where space was more confined, the buildings retained their wings and their aspect of generosity of mass, the chief difference between town and country being that in the country there were more out-buildings. Each plantation house was its own store, as the merchant class in Maryland was small and each house had a private wharf where goods were received from vessels from Europe. The greater planters owned the schooners in which barter was carried on with the mother country.

The decoration of the homes was done by hand by intelligent servants trained to the work or by those artisans whom chance, misfortune, or adventure sent to the New World.

Despite the mildness of the climate in Maryland and Delaware and the severity of the summers the houses were built without piazzas. Sometimes there would be a covered stoop at the entrance, but the English tradition in this regard was carefully followed. It was not until after the end of the eighteenth century that the porch as a place of sufficient size for the family to take the air was introduced. The grounds around the houses were almost always carefully terraced and, usually, toward the river. This gave a splendid space on which to stroll of humid evenings, and summer-houses in the gardens were very common.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

A distinguishing feature of the builders of the colonial mansions in both Maryland and Delaware seems to have been their love of gardens. After the planter had built his house, he always chose a sunny spot of ground to devote to flowers and box-bushes, these latter guarding the sides of formally planned gravel walks.

Just how long did it take our forefathers to build one of these homes? Probably about four years on the average if there was no interruption. We know that two years after the Chase House in Annapolis, Maryland, was started the outside of the house was completed. Skilled labor was scarce and the builders of those days did their work with a care and a regard to permanence which does not mark all modern home erection. The timbers of Tulip Hill, West River, Maryland, are heavy enough for the keel of a large ship, and the thick walls of the quaint Ridgely House, Dover, Delaware, would

ST. PAUL'S RECTORY, BALTIMORE
1794

---

INTRODUCTION

---

make a whole city block of two-story modern brick houses.

When our forefathers built a fine house how much did it cost them? The Chase House, Annapolis, when almost completed was sold by Samuel Chase for nearly five hundred pounds sterling, of Great Britain, and twenty-four hundred pounds current, while the purchase price for the lot on which the house stood was one hundred pounds sterling. When Ninian Pinkney sold his beautiful home opposite the Chase House to Jeremiah Townely Chase in 1811, the consideration was three thousand, five hundred dollars, of the United States mint, the purchasing power of a dollar being much greater then than now. Whatever our forefathers' homes may have cost them when new, it is lamentably true that until very recent years many of them were sold for the proverbial song, and rag-time at that.

Of nearly every old house that one visits, it is proudly asserted that the bricks were brought over from England, usually as ballast for the ship it is said, or as the result of a direct order for such a commodity. This is a tradition that seems to have no settled home. It can be heard in Maryland, Pennsylvania and Georgia, yet there is not a single bill of lading recorded in Maryland which shows brick as an item of import, and the only pertinent information in the author's possession upon this moot question is the recollection of certain members of the Snowden family of Maryland of having seen passages in old letters that referred to brick having been brought from England for the building of Birmingham. These letters were destroyed by the fire which carried away this beautiful manor house. The fire did not destroy the brick in entirety and, to be sure, they are of size and texture not resembling any other old brick in Maryland. It would seem that as a rule, however, the popular tradition of imported brick is without foundation, though one hesitates to contravene a general opinion so well established. But the colonists needed more important things from England than brick to ballast a ship, and there was good clay in this country. Governor Sharpe had his own brick-yard to assist in the building of Whitehall, Maryland. It is probable that the planters as a class were their own brick-makers.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

Around the old homes of Maryland and Delaware hang many traditions often scattered to various quarters to be gathered together one by one. Sometimes one finds a beautiful colonial homestead which seems to strive terribly to unfold to you the story of its past but for which you miss just the word which will make all intelligible to you. There comes to mind in this connection the Stemmer House, near Baltimore, about which records cannot be found to connect its history from its erection just before the Revolution by the man from whom it took its name with its acquisition not long after the opening of the nineteenth century by Robert Howard. It is now owned and occupied by Miss Sallie Hays, the grand-daughter of Robert Howard, and lately housed, also, the family of Miss Hays's cousin, Mrs. E. B. Hall. This old homestead is one of the finest examples of colonial architecture in Maryland, and yet it is to be doubted if more than two dozen people outside of its immediate neighborhood know of its existence. It consists of a central building with wings, though the wings are not developed to the full type which marked most of the homes of Maryland of this period. It is large, and contains very beautiful interior carving. The stairway which leads from the rear of the usual central hall is of notable grace, winding to the second floor in an airy curve with a window lighting its course midway and with hardwood stairs and with slender mahogany pilasters. In its general design it resembles the stair of Montmorenci, the Worthington homestead in the Worthington Valley, Maryland.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

The builder of this mansion, it has been asserted, was a sea-captain who was so wedded to the ways of the sea that he had a hammock slung in his bedroom on the second floor and slept in this in preference to a bedstead which a land-lubber might have chosen. In proof of this, two large hooks are shown you in this room from which a hammock might have been slung. The grounds around the house were carefully terraced and in the rear was a garden.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

The era of fine home building in Maryland reached its finest flower in Annapolis, as would be supposed from the social pre-eminence of this little capital, just before the Revolution. In southern Maryland, the scene of the original settlement of the State, are to be found homes even antedating the Georgian period of building, some very pretentious and all equally difficult of access because of the poor railroad facilities of this part of the State. Among the charming homes in Saint Mary's County, Maryland, of which an extended story has not been told in the body of the book are: Tudor Hall, Mrs. Joseph H. Key's place; Ellenborough, another Key house; Cremona, which has been inherited by Miss Eliza Thomas, of Baltimore; Saint Cuthbert's, the home of Mrs. Walter Briscoe; and Portobello, opposite the historic town-site of St. Mary's, now the possession of Mrs. Hyatt.

There may be mentioned, too, Rose Hill, Chancellor's Hope and Pamunky, in Charles County; Ranelagh, the Contee place, Brookefield, Poplar Hill, Bald Eagle, the Waring homestead, Acquasco and Mattaponi, in Prince George's County; the Hermitage in Queen Anne's County; Plimhimmon and Myrtle Grove in Talbot County; the Lee House, Rehoboth, in Dorchester County; Success Farm, in Cecil County; the

THE STEMMER HOUSE

---

INTRODUCTION

---

Dairy Farm, the Hall homestead, in Harford County. All of these places were in preservation a few years ago.

Among the interesting colonial homes in Delaware not treated fully in the text are: Belmont Hall, near Smyrna; the Wilson House and the Corbit House at Odessa; and the Cowgill House at Dover. The Cowgill House has been very well described in a novel popular twenty years ago, "The Entailed Hat."

A long chapter might be written of the beautiful colonial homes in Maryland and Delaware which have passed away in the memory of the last generation.

In some of the colonial places of these two States life is lived in a state closely approximating that when the house was new. In Oakdale, Howard County, the home of former Governor Edwin F. Warfield, of Maryland, one finds himself where the traditions of this old Maryland family are carefully maintained.

A minor triumph of colonial home building in Maryland is the rectory of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Baltimore, illustrated in this chapter. Erected in 1794 as the home of the spiritual director of this parish, it has never served any other purpose. It at present shelters the Rev. Dr. Arthur Kinsolving and his family. Situated at the intersection of busy Cathedral and Saratoga streets in the downtown section and opposite a large hotel, it draws many curious glances from Baltimoreans and strangers to the city alike.

---

INTRODUCTION

---

The life that was lived in these old homes has been pictured often by novelists and historians. It was not all cards and wine, dancing and love-making, with a little bit of duelling thrown in for good measure after breakfast as cheap romancers would have it, but one cannot help thinking that the occupants of these houses knew how to live life fully and frankly and one may be sure that they had sufficient leisure, as well, for reflection and rest.

•

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

•

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

CHASE—LLOYD—HARWOOD—RIDOUT

---

HE old Chase House, Annapolis, Maryland, as it is affectionately spoken of by residents of this quaint and delightful city, is one of the largest of the colonial mansions which have made that place a Mecca for artists and students of architecture. It faces the Hammond House on the north side of Maryland Avenue, over which it gazes to the sleepy harbor front and the broad waters of Chesapeake Bay at the mouth of the Severn River, its three stories and a half above the pavement giving it an advantage of height over any other residence in Annapolis.

The house is situated on the main way to the Naval Academy and receives many visitors daily from among the sightseers to this institution. Of late years it has been the home of a public charity and gives open door to all callers. Few men or women could be so absorbed in affairs of the present as to fail to respond to its mute invitation to step aside for a few moments for a trip into the past.

When Annapolis was laid out in 1695, the ground on which the old mansion stands was surveyed, forming a part of the original plat of the city. The town-site commissioners put down two adjacent circles of ground in what is the centre of the present-day city. One of these circles they labelled "State," and here the capitol of Maryland stands, a beautiful Georgian edifice with a quaint dome and interior decorations by Bulfinch. The other circle they called "Church," and here was erected St. Anne's Church (of the Church of England) thrice rebuilt but sheltering within its grounds the bones of most of Annapolis' honored dead, including those of many of these very same town-site commissioners. Another part of the future city the commissioners devoted to "Trade," other parts to "Gentlemen's Homes," and "Tradesmen's Homes." State, Church, Trade, and Gentility were kept carefully separated in the ancient city until well after the Revolution, for it was an aristocratic city with aristocratic ideals; and they are separated even now, some of the city's critics would say.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

In the heart of the fine residence district, the Chase House was planned and finished. It faces southeast and is built close to the southeast boundary of its lot, which is enclosed by a high, old-time paling fence. Over the Maryland Avenue side of this fence, near the front door, hang sweet-flowering bushes, the remains of a garden planted a century or more ago. Though the garden is not so orderly as it once was---with close-clipt hedges and tiny, gravelled walks---it still shows the plan on which it was laid out in ye olden time.

ENTRANCE TO CHASE HOUSE
1769

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

---

The doorway of the old home is of three-part construction with a fanlight over the central portion, and is approached by a high, broad flight of steps headed by a commodious landing with quaint benches on either side. There is a brass knocker on the door representing Medusa's head, with the knocker-stirrup encircling the lower part of the face.

Though large, the house is not ill-proportioned, and the monotonous expanse of the walls is varied by string courses of brick which mark the different stories. The cornice is heavy and the eaves of the roof have wide projections lowering the appearance of the house, and preventing its seeming too high. The carved medallion panels on the inside shutters are to be plainly seen from the street, and this feature adds a touch of ornament to the plain exterior.

The house was originally intended to have wings, but these were never finished, though there is a sort of "rudimentary development" on the northeast side, wherein is situated a kitchen and a laundry.

The main building is divided through the middle by a broad hallway leading from the front door to a great stairway at the back of the house. To the right of this hall, as one enters, is the dining-room, an apartment of stately proportions. To the left is the parlor. Beyond the parlor is a sitting-room, and between these rooms runs a passage from the main hall to a little terrace overlooking the remains of the garden. To the rear of the dining-room is a small breakfast-room, while between these two rooms is a passage leading down a steep flight of stairs, through a very thick old door-frame to the kitchen. There are no other rooms on the first floor.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The stairway commences with a single flight leading to a landing. Steps and landing are lighted by a Palladian window which has been copied in many beautiful homes of this country. From here there are two flights in a reverse direction which run without break to a gallery on the second floor. From this gallery halls extend to the northeast and southwest sides of the house. Much less conspicuous stairs conduct one from the second to the third floor. The base of the main stairway is marked by two fine Ionic columns which support the gallery on the second floor. This flight of steps is that down which Dorothy Manners tripped so blithely and so effectively in Winston Churchill's novel of colonial Annapolis, "Richard Carvel," Annapolitans assert, but there is no foundation for the story, save the fitting beauty of the stair. A back-stairs is to be found in the house, too, an unusual thing in houses of the Georgian period, and a sign of great extravagance in its builder.

The doors of the house throughout are of solid mahogany with latches and hinges of wrought silver. There is much wood-carving, particularly in the dining-room, and the ceilings of the first floor are of stucco.

The foundations of the Chase House were laid in 1760 by Samuel Chase, "the Signer." In May of that

SHUTTER CARVING, CHASE HOUSE

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

---

year he purchased lot Number One Hundred and Seven in the city of Annapolis, an old deed in the land record office, Annapolis, tells us, from Denton Hammond for One Hundred Pounds, Sterling. He commenced to build immediately, and two years from this time, in July, 1771, sold this piece of ground and "all houses, edifices, buildings, improvements, waters, easements, privileges, commodities and advantages whatsoever to the same belonging" to Edward Lloyd, of "Wye House," Talbot County, Maryland. The consideration involved was "Five Hundred and Four Pounds, Sterling, of Great Britain, and Two Thousand, Four Hundred and Ninety-one Pounds, Seventeen Shillings and Seven Pence, Current."

These words are quoted from an indenture among the provincial court records of Maryland, now in the Land Commissioner's office in the Court of Appeals Building, Annapolis, and are given verbatim, as it has been a matter of dispute whether Samuel Chase built entirely the old mansion that bears his name, whether he built it in part and left it to be finished by Edward Lloyd, or whether he was at all concerned in its erection. Considering the sum of money involved in the transaction last noted, rather great for property in those days—especially when compared with the amount which was paid for the lot two years prior thereto—it seems indisputable that the house was substantially completed when it came into its second owner's hands.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

At the same time, when we think of the scarcity of skilled labor and the general slowness of construction work at that time, we must conclude that the interior was finished under Edward Lloyd's direction, and the final stamp given the property by him. This view is strikingly borne out by a comparison of the exterior and interior of the house. The big, simple masses of the exterior and the uncomplicated general plan of the house, contrasted with the slim, fastidious silver door-fittings and decorations of the interior, show two decidedly different personalities, and these observations agree very well, too, with the characters of Samuel Chase and Edward Lloyd, as they are to be seen in records of their contemporaries.

In the registry of wills of Baltimore city is to be found the testament of Thomas Chase, "clerk of Baltimore Town, Baltimore County," probated in the year 1779, in which the testator leaves all his world's goods to "son Samuel." This Thomas Chase was the father of the builder of the Chase home. He was a clergyman of the Church of England, but held a civil position for the greater part of his life. The document mentions other children, Ann, Elizabeth, George, and Richard.

There is another will of earlier date in this same depository, bearing the name of Richard Chase, brother of Thomas, which mentions two children, Jeremiah and Frances. These good old English names, Thomas, Samuel, Richard, Jeremiah, Ann, and Elizabeth, recur constantly in the records of the Chase family. This Richard Chase's will contains one statement, too, showing at least that its maker had a mind of his own: "I desire that no funeral sermon shall be preached at my interment."

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

---

"Son Samuel," of Thomas, was educated in Annapolis when that little city was beginning to thrill to that spirit of independence which brought about the Revolution, and was filled with men ardently reciting the creed of liberty. Among them very soon one finds Chase conspicuous. He joined the "Sons of Liberty" and became known for uncompromising frankness of utterance and a personal bravery that has made him a picturesque figure in Maryland annals. A somewhat more opulent follower of the Hustings than Andrew Jackson, he yet resembles that great fire-eater of later times in many particulars. Once he was assailed by certain prominent men of Annapolis with a newspaper canard containing the following words: "Chase is a busy-body, a restless incendiary, a ring-leader of mobs, a foulmouthed and inflaming son of discord and faction, a promoter of the lawless excesses of the multitude." This followed his connection with the destruction of the property of Zachariah Hood, stamp collector for the province of Maryland. Says the historian Warfield:

Chase replied to these words in a vehement public address: "Was it a mob who destroyed in effigy our stamp distributor? Was it a mob who assembled here from the different counties and indignantly opened the public offices? Whatever vanity may whisper in your ears, or that pride and arrogance may suggest which are natural to despicable tools of power, emerged from obscurity and basking in proprietary sunshine, you must confess them to be your superiors, men of reputation and merit, who are mentioned with respect while you are named with contempt, pointed out and hissed at as fruges consumere nati.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

"I admit that I was one of those who committed to the flames in effigy the stamp distributor of this province, and who openly disputed the parliamentary right to tax the colonies; while you skulked in your houses, some of you asserting the parliamentary right and esteeming the Stamp Act a beneficial law. Others of you meanly grumbled in your corners, not daring to speak out your sentiments."

It was a time of strong men and strong language! On another occasion, while Chief Justice of the General Court of Maryland, and when there was a riot in the streets of Baltimore, Chase with his own unaided hands arrested two of the ringleaders of the disturbance of the peace and dragged them before the sheriff.

His prisoners refused to give bail and the sheriff was afraid there would be a successful effort to rescue them if he took them to jail through the crowded streets.

"Summon a posse comitatus," thundered Judge Chase.

"Sir, no one will serve."

"Summon me, then; I will take them to jail!"

Instead of presenting the rioters, the grand jury indicted the judge for holding a place in two courts at the same time.

PALLADIAN WINDOW IN CHASE HOUSE

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

---

Still later in life, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, by appointment from President Washington, Chase was impeached in the United States Senate for mingling diatribes against current political conditions with his judicial utterances. While the impeachment did not hold, no one doubted its provocation. He was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a delegate to the Continental Congress from 1774 to 1778.

Judge Chase's first wife was Ann Baldwin, of an old Maryland family, by whom he had four children, Samuel, Thomas, Ann, and Catherine. He married a second time, Hannah Kitty Giles, of Kentbury, England, and died June 19, 1811. Thomas Chase married his cousin, Matilda, daughter of Jeremiah T. Chase. Catherine married Henry Ridgely, of Howard County, Maryland.

The second owner of the mansion, Edward Lloyd, of Wye House, was of the old baronial stock of the colony, and was the fourth Edward Lloyd in Maryland. The family was English in origin and a more extended account of it will be found in the chapter on Wye House, where this Edward kept a deer park, horses and hounds, and rode when he went abroad, in that illustrious but cumbersome institution—a coach and four. His tax assessment in 1788, despite depredations by British marauders at Wye House, included 261 slaves, 799 head of sheep, 147 horses, 571 head of cattle, 579 head of hogs, 215,000 pounds of tobacco, 500 ounces of plate and 72 tracts of land covering 11,884½ acres. At his death he left his home in Annapolis to his son Edward Lloyd, V, who became Governor of Maryland, 1809-1811.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

During its occupancy by Edward Lloyd, IV, the Chase House was the scene of many brilliant social entertainments, and the tradition of hospitality thus established was continued by this gentleman's son and heir, Edward Lloyd, V, the next occupant, during whose occupancy, moreover, the old home became the "Governor's Mansion" of Maryland, by reason of its master's election to that high office in 1809.

One must again turn to the record office in Annapolis to follow the life of the Chase House. May 11, 1826, Edward Lloyd, V, sold the Chase House to his son-in-law, Henry Hall Harwood, for $6,500, the first mention in deeds concerning the property of coin of the United States. November 5, 1847, it was purchased from the heirs of Henry Hall Harwood, who died suddenly, by Miss Hester Ann Chase, daughter of Jeremiah T. Chase. She left it, in her will of 1875, to her nieces, Matilda and Frances Catherine Townley Chase, daughters of Thomas Chase (son of Judge Samuel) and his cousin-wife Matilda (daughter of Jeremiah T. Chase). The old home thus came back at last to descendants of its founder. These two ladies did not marry and were survived by their sister, Hester Ann Chase Ridout, wife of Reverend Samuel Ridout, to whom they in turn left their half-interest in the old home.

---

THE CHASE HOUSE

---

The final phase of the life of the Chase House was entered into in 1888, following the death of Hester Ann Chase Ridout, by reason of the following words in this noble-hearted woman's will: "Desiring to establish a home for destitute, aged and infirm women, where they may find a retreat from the vicissitudes of life and to endow the same, as far as my means will allow, to be called and known as the 'Chase Home,' I hereby devise and bequeath to Dr. William G. Ridout, John Scharff Stockett, John Wirt Randall, Frank H. Stockett, Eugene Worthington, Dr. Zachariah D. Ridout, Elizabeth M. Franklin, and Nannie S. Stockett, and to their heirs, successors and assigns, all that lot of ground on Maryland Avenue, in the City of Annapolis, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, where I now reside . . . together with the furniture which may be in said house at the time of my decease, not including, however, family portraits and silver-ware; in trust, to be held by them and their successors in perpetuity for the objects and purposes of such 'Home.'" Mrs. Ridout also left property in Baltimore to these trustees as an endowment for the "Home."

She survived her husband three years, and had no direct heirs. In accordance with her request, she lies buried at Whitehall, her husband's family home, and by his side.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Its later owners have not changed the Chase House in any essential, preferring rather to maintain it in its vestiture of the olden times. It contains, amongst other minor colonial relics, a set of china bearing the Chase coat-of-arms, an immense bedstead requiring a set of steps to enter it, and an eight-day clock which belonged to the bachelor Proprietary Governor Horatio Sharpe, and was kept by him at Whitehall.

---

THE HAMMOND, OR HARWOOD, HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

HAMMOND—PINKNEY—CHASE—LOCKERMAN—HARWOOD

---

THE Hammond House, Annapolis, Maryland, very often called the Harwood House, is on Maryland Avenue, directly opposite the Chase House, just described. A more striking contrast in exterior than these two buildings could hardly be imagined, as, where the latter is high and square, the former is low, long and distinguished for grace; the one a solid, single unit, the other depending for its architectural effect almost entirely upon one-story-and-a-half wings, which are almost the only examples of semi-octagonal additions of this character in the United States. The Chase House is notable for breadth, simplicity, and generosity of line and mass; the Hammond House for elegance, refinement of detail, and beautiful proportion. Either one in itself would be sufficient to give character to a city fortunate enough to possess it, and that the two, so diverse in character, yet so representative of the best homes of our fathers, should be face to face affably holding converse in stately eighteenth-century style across the same street in the same city, is a rare cause for congratulation.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The Hammond House was built in 1774 by Matthias Hammond, the revolutionary patriot; was inherited, in 1786, by John Hammond, nephew of the builder; sold by its inheritor, in 1789, to his brother, Philip Hammond; was transferred by purchase, March 31, 1810, from Philip Hammond to Ninian Pinkney and by purchase, October 28, 1811, from Ninian Pinkney to Jeremiah Townley Chase, who bought it as a home for his daughter, Frances Townley Chase Lockerman. The present owner of the house is Miss Hester Harwood, a granddaughter of Frances Townley Chase Lockerman, whose father, William Harwood, in 1853, married Mrs. Lockerman's daughter, Hester Ann Lockerman.

There are many interesting traditions in Annapolis of this old property, one of them relating to the quaint transaction that took place between Edward Lloyd who lived in the Chase House and Matthias Hammond during the building of the latter's home. The story goes that the latter had planned to have a three-story edifice without wings, very much like other town houses of the time in Annapolis, and was proceeding merrily along in this direction, when it occurred to the former that if the latter carried out his plans in full, the former would have no view of the water from his front windows—a very much sought-after condition in those days.

Events proved that the two gentlemen were good friends, as otherwise, in that litigious age and city, they would certainly have gone to the courts and our two beautiful colonial reminders of the present day might never have been finished; or the two men would never have come to so amicable an agreement as they did reach. Mr. Hammond agreed to change the plans of his house so that Mr. Lloyd might have a good view if Mr. Lloyd would pay the cost of the wings which would be added to his house to make up for the space lost in the projected third story. Thus, instead of his hopes taking wings, as they might have done had he gone into the courts, Mr. Hammond's house took wings, and all was well. This accounts for the fact that the foundation walls of the Hammond House are five feet thick in the central portion, which—even with the generous emphasis on such details of those days—seems rather too much for a two-story building.

---

THE HAMMOND, OR HARWOOD, HOUSE

---

Another tradition in Annapolis of the old home has a flavor of romance. Mr. Hammond was engaged to be married to a fair lady, whose name has not been handed down to us, and this house, a very gem of classical architecture, was to be his wedding gift to his bride. It was finished, and its master had even sent to Philadelphia for furniture when his fiancée would have nothing more to do with him because, tradition hath reported it, she declared he gave more of his thoughts to the house than to herself. The rift in the lute of love between these two was complete, their marriage never took place, and the only result was this beautiful creation of brick and mortar which has preserved its form and dignity when the human beings who brought it into existence have almost passed from recollection.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Its builder was the great-grandson of Maj.-Gen. John Hammond, who settled near Annapolis, Maryland, before the eighteenth century and died in 1707, Matthias' line of descent reading; John, Charles, Philip. Since we must hear again of his family, and since he remained a bachelor throughout the rest of his life, we shall not now further discuss him except to say that by profession he was an attorney.

The Hammond House is notable for its doorway which, with the second-floor window and the bull's-eye above, form a group very generally and greatly admired.

The principle of symmetry is observed with great strictness throughout the exterior and interior of the house. In the reception-room, even, where a doorway is needed in one wall to balance a doorway in the adjacent wall, a dummy-door has been constructed, which is complete in every detail of lintel, frame and carving.

The left wing of the house is not connected with the main body, and was used as an office by the builder of the house. The right wing is connected, and contains the kitchen and pantry. In each wing are second floors containing bedrooms.

The main hall-way leads from the main entrance to a drawing-room in the back of the house overlooking the garden. On the right of the drawing-room is the

ENTRANCE TO HAMMOND HOUSE
1774

---

THE HAMMOND, OR HARWOOD, HOUSE

---

dining-room. A library and a reception-room are on either side of the hall.

On the second floor, over the dining and drawing-rooms, and taking in the whole back of the house, is a ball-room, nineteen by twenty-seven feet, one of the most beautiful colonial rooms ever built. It is wainscoted with wood to the height of about three feet, and the tall window frames, door frames, mantel and cornice are most exquisitely carved. The great charm of the room lies in its fine proportions, high ceiling, and atmosphere of grace and dignity, and it was a fitting setting for the many brilliant social gatherings it held under its first master's régime.

The ground back of the house once sloped away to the water, but the little creek which did duty then has long since been filled in, and the only view to be obtained in that quarter now is the roofs of the Paca and Brice mansions and the tops of some modern little structures built on "made" land. The remains of a terraced garden are to be found here, yet this garden in its fullest perfection was not original with the house, but is to be associated with the name of a later occupant, Frances Townley Chase Lockerman, whose love for, and success with, flowers was proverbial in her day. She it was who planned the walks and had set out the borders, the remains of which we admire to-day.

The deed of sale, on record in the land office at Annapolis, Maryland, between Philip Hammond and

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Ninian Pinkney, contains a concise summary of the title of the house, which seems to point to the fact that Pinkney had been a tenant before he purchased it, and a section may be quoted. The location of the property is described, and then follows:

all of which four lots or parcels of ground lie contiguous and adjacent to each other and form a square commonly called "Hammond's Square," and on which property the aforesaid Matthias Hammond built that elegant and commodious dwelling-house, office and kitchen, which was lately rented and now occupied by the above-mentioned Ninian Pinkney, a party to these presents. The above-mentioned property was devised to John Hammond, son of Charles Hammond, in the last will and testament of the aforesaid Matthias Hammond, as will fully appear by the said will, and which property was by John Hammond on or about the 14th of December, 1789, conveyed to the above-mentioned Philip Hammond.

Ninian Pinkney's father, Jonathan Pinkney, was a sturdy, bulldog Englishman, who remained loyal to the mother country during the Revolution and lost, as a consequence, his lifetime's accumulation of property. His sons, Jonathan, William, and Ninian, had each to make his own way in the world from the beginning, which each did successfully, William, in especial, rising to high honor at the bar and in the statecraft of his country, serving variously as United States Senator, Minister to Great Britain, Minister to Russia, and Attorney-General of the United States. Ninian, the youngest son, married twice. By his second wife,

SEAL OF THE AMERICAN EMPIRE PERIOD

Part of the estate of the late Mrs. Mary V. Hammond, of Frederick County, Md.
(Dimension: Seal, 8 feet by 2 feet. Height of back from floor, 24 inches.)

---

THE HAMMOND, OR HARWOOD, HOUSE

---

Amelia Grason Hobbs, a widow, daughter of Richard Grason, of Talbot County, and sister of Governor William Grason, of Maryland, he had three children: Mary Amelia, William, and Ninian, Jr. He was "Clerk of the Council" for thirty years.

William Pinkney, son of Ninian, became fifth Bishop of Maryland of the Episcopal Church. He was born in the old house we have been studying. His nephew and namesake, the late United States Senator, William Pinkney Whyte, carried the name to distinction in recent years.

Ninian Pinkney, Jr., born in the Hammond House in 1811, became medical director of the United States Army, married Mary Sherwood, and died in 1871. Mary Amelia Pinkney, the only daughter of this occupant of the Hammond House, died unmarried.

In 1811, Mr. Pinkney sold his home to Chief Justice Jeremiah Townley Chase, who bought it for his daughter, Frances Catherine Townley Chase, wife of Richard Lockerman, a descendant of the Maryland branch of the old Knickerbocker family of Loockermans, whose name so largely figures in the early annals of New York City. One child was born of this union, Hester Ann Lockerman, named for her maternal aunt, Hester Ann Chase, who in 1847 bought the Chase House. This daughter inherited the Hammond House and married the late Judge William Harwood. She had two daughters and one son; Lucy Matilda, Hester Ann, and

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Richard Lockerman Harwood. The son died childless. Over his grave in the burying ground at Cemetery Creek, Annapolis, is the simple inscription: "Richard Lockerman Harwood, a Confederate soldier of Maryland Cavalry, only son of Mrs. Hester Ann Harwood." Lucy Matilda Harwood died unmarried. Miss Hester Ann Harwood, the sole survivor of this generation of the family, is the present owner of the Harwood House. She makes her home in the left, or northeast wing, the rest of the house being leased to Rear Admiral Garst, U. S. N., retired, and his family, which consists of his wife and a young daughter.

Judge William Harwood, father of Miss Hester Harwood, was an ardent sympathizer with the Confederate cause during the "late unpleasantness," and remained for long thoroughly unreconstructed. He was a teacher in a school in Baltimore during, and for some years after, the war and would not use the train between Annapolis, his home, and that city as in order to do so he would be compelled to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, but every week tramped the thirty miles to Baltimore and back. He was greatly beloved in Annapolis.

The Harwood family is one of much distinction in Maryland, and its branches have gone into Pennsylvania and southern states, one of the members of the Pennsylvania branch being Dr. James Harwood Closson, of Germantown. It springs from Richard Harwood, of "Hooker's Purchase," Anne Arundel County, Maryland, who was the son of Thomas, of Streatley, Berkshire County, England. Richard, son of this Richard, married Anne Watkins, born 1737, and had nine sons and two daughters, among whom were Colonel Richard, of "South River battalion," who married Margaret Hall; and Thomas, first Treasurer of the Western Shore of Maryland, under the Council of Safety of 1776. The son of Colonel Richard, of "South River battalion," was Henry Hall Harwood, who married Elizabeth Lloyd, and purchased the Chase House. So the Harwood name has been closely associated with two of Maryland's most beautiful colonial survivals. Thomas, Treasurer of the Western Shore of Maryland, had a son, Richard, who married a Miss Callahan, and became the father of William Harwood, who married Hester Ann Lockerman and thus comes into this chapter.

---

THE HAMMOND, OR HARWOOD, HOUSE

---

---

THE PACA HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

PACA—SCHAAF—NETH—BLAND—KENNEDY—SWANN

---

PROBABLY none of the old homesteads of Annapolis is more familiar to the general public than the Paca House, of late years used as a hotel. A superb example of solid, tasteful colonial building, it stands on Prince George Street, south of Maryland Avenue and half a city block away from the old Major Dorsey home, which was built well before the beginning of the eighteenth century. Across an open space at the rear may be seen the back of the Hammond House and the roof of the Chase Home for the aged. Next door is the Brice mansion.

The Paca House was built in 1763 by William Paca, ardent stirrer in the revolutionary turmoil and signer of the Declaration. It is of the conventional type of a Maryland colonial home of elegance in that it consists of a central building with wings; and its general aspect is that of simplicity, dignity, and mass. It is exceedingly large, being only rivalled in size by its neighbors, the Brice and Chase Houses. The brickwork is good, and the walls, five feet thick at the foundations, are as impregnable to the assaults of the elements to-day as when they first were built.

---

THE PACA HOUSE

---

The interior of the house is not characterized by that elaboration of ornament that distinguishes some other Annapolis homes, but the window-casings and shutters of the parlor are very beautifully carved in a simple floral design. The house has a wide hall through the middle and the staircase is situated at the back of the hall, leading off to the left beneath an arch. The attic or third-story stairway has a very intricate balustrade of white rails set in a sort of a zigzag design that is very novel though not greatly attractive.

One of the most notable features of the homestead in its youth was the garden in the rear which ran down to a little stream of water making in from the harbour only a hundred yards or so away. "My Lady's Bower" it was called, and it is inevitably recalled first in connection with the old house when old residents of the ancient city send their thoughts back to times before the hand of change could be so plainly seen as now. It contained a summer house, a miniature lake, a fountain, a wharf, and a staunch bateau. In this the master of the house was accustomed to be rowed by half a dozen blacks in livery when he paid state visits to his neighbors on the Severn or one of the nearby streams which were the chief means of communication from house to house in those days.

Many years ago the garden fell into decay, and when the property passed into the possession of the hotel company which at present owns it the last vestiges of this fairy-land of flowers and quaint box-walks were destroyed, the very bricks which formed its boundary walls being broken apart and carried around to the front of the house, where they were relaid to make a new approach to the stately mansion.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Much of the beauty of this old garden, tradition asserts, was due to the care with which it was tended by the first mistress of the old home, Mary Chew Paca,—daughter of Samuel and Henrietta Maria Lloyd Chew—for whom the house was built. She it was who laid it out and it was her delight to spend her leisure hours in its familiar little nooks and corners.

She was of that distinguished family which has set its mark in four states. John Chew, the first of his name in this country, came to Virginia in the Sea Flower, in 1622, settled in Jamestown, and became a member of the House of Burgesses. Samuel Chew, his son—of “Herrington,” on Herring Creek, Anne Arundel County, Maryland—was Lord Baltimore’s “well-beloved Samuel Chew, Esq.” In 1669 he was sworn in as one of the justices of the chancery and provincial courts, and until his death in 1676 was a member of the House of Assembly. His son, Samuel, married Henrietta Maria Lloyd and his granddaughter, Mary, married William Paca.

Samuel Chew, of Maidstone, near Annapolis, Maryland, son of Benjamin, son of Samuel, removed to Dover, Delaware, and was father of that famous

---

THE PACA HOUSE

---

Benjamin Chew, who, in turn, moved to Pennsylvania and built Cliveden, that beautiful homestead of Germantown, Philadelphia, around which the battle of Germantown was fought and about whose social frivolities—in which figured such conspicuous lights as Major André—many a tradition is current.

William Paca, builder of the Paca House, and who deserves and has received far more study than this memoir can give, was born in Harford County, Maryland, October 31, 1740. His father was John Paca; his mother, Elizabeth Smith Paca. The name is Italian in origin, family tradition asserts, and there is a touch of the Roman in the features and olive skin of the Signer as they appear in his portraits. Elizabeth Smith, wife of John Paca, father of William, was a daughter of that “pretty Betty Martin” with whose name an old nursery rhyme is so free. It runs as follows:

Pretty Betty Martin,
Tip-toe! Tip-toe!
Pretty Betty Martin,
Tip-toe fine!

Pretty Betty Martin,
Tip-toe! Tip-toe!
Couldn't find a husband
To suit her mind!

The story is that “Pretty Betty Martin” was born in England and when she came to this country, a young woman, had so many suitors on the ship in which she made the voyage that she could not choose among them, so, consequently, rejected all. It has been said that she was a niece of the Duke of Marlborough, but even this reflected effulgence of glory can add little to her fame as the heroine of the jingle just quoted.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Her son was educated at Philadelphia under the tuition of Reverend William Smith, D.D., and, after he acquired all of the polite accomplishments and knowledge deemed necessary to a gentleman, was sent to Annapolis, Maryland, to read law in the office of his father's friend, Stephen Bordley, Esquire, one of the great lights of the early days of the Maryland bar. In 1761 he was licensed to practise law and in 1764 was admitted to the bar. At this time Annapolis was at its gayest as a social capital and was already beginning to work itself up to that fever pitch of feeling against the mother country which marked the days just before the outbreak of the War of Independence. Young Paca became a member of the Sons of Liberty, and one of his exploits—of a somewhat later period of his life—was to head a mob which hung on a gibbet and buried in a coffin the proclamation enforcing the Stamp Act issued by Governor Eden, the last Proprietary executive of Maryland, while meantime in the harbour minute guns were fired from a schooner owned by him. He was a delegate to the Continental Assembly in 1774 where, against the instructions of his constituents, he

THE PACA HOUSE
1763

---

THE PACA HOUSE

---

continually advocated the ratification of a declaration of independence from Great Britain, and two years later was a signer of the immortal proclamation of American liberty. In 1778 he was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Maryland; in 1782-1784 and 1786-1788, Governor of Maryland; and in 1789, by appointment from President Washington, Judge of the United States District Court for Maryland. Washington was urged to appoint another man, but replied that if it had not been for Paca and others like him there would have been no United States and that he deserved the place. He died, October 27, 1799, at the home of his son, John Philemon Paca, of Wye House, Wye Island, Talbot County, Maryland. Here in a grove of trees not far from the site of the house his body was committed to the earth.

On the day of its organization in Maryland, November 21, 1783, the Society of the Cincinnati, of Maryland, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, that as a testimony of the satisfaction we feel in the opportunity we enjoy of returning to our respective stations in the general class of the community and of recommencing our civil occupations under a government which we have aided to establish and which we all approve and will endeavor to maintain; and in consideration of the abilities, merit, patriotism of His Excellency, Governor Paca, this society direct that the Secretary-General Williams wait on His Excellency and inform him that this society do themselves the honor to consider him as an honorary member.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

He was the same day elected a delegate to the general society and a year later vice-president of the Maryland society.

In 1789, shortly after the conclusion of his second term as Governor of Maryland, Paca sold his home in Annapolis to Arthur Schaaf who, in turn, disposed of it to Louis Neth, a rich merchant of Annapolis, the owner of Primrose, another beautiful colonial home about five miles out of the ancient city which he used as a country place. In 1827 the house was occupied by Chancellor Theodoric Bland, and then, for a number of years, by Dr. S. D. Kennedy, a beloved physician of Annapolis. From his family it passed to Mrs. Richard Swann, who sold it to the company which at present holds its title.

The old homestead saw its most brilliant days during the occupancy of its first master and mistress. Annapolis was at the brightest point of its history then and Governor Paca was endowed with that precious gift of personal magnetism which draws together and stimulates congenial spirits. The mansion held many a delightful and notable gathering at this time.

Before the Revolution Washington as a visitor to Annapolis spent many hours as a guest of Mr. Paca—when neither had yet been singled out for the honors of the world—and in 1783, when the latter was Governor of Maryland, his hospitable home sheltered many members of the Continental Congress which assembled in Annapolis to witness the great leader resign his commission as Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States. Chairs from the house were taken to the beautiful old Senate chamber in the capitol of Maryland for the use of the delegates and are represented in some paintings of the historic ceremony in which they figured.

---

THE PACA HOUSE

---

A rather quaint tribute to Governor Paca was found among some papers in Wye Hall, Wye Island, Maryland, in 1888, and was then reproduced in Lippincott's Magazine. It was an address from a student's club of budding lawyers which Governor Paca had been instrumental in forming in Annapolis, and a passage from it is as follows:

When a man in the tranquility (sic) and leisure of private life employs part of his time in the improvement of the rising generation, we readily acknowledge the justice of his claim to the thanks of every considerate mind. But when we behold the Supreme Magistrate of a State, with all the cares of government on his hands, devoting his short intervals of repose to the instruction of Youth, by his knowledge and experience pointing out to them the path to Virtue and Glory, the most inattentive must admire such conduct and acknowledge it to be far above the reach of panegyric.

Of the union of William Paca and Mary Chew were born: John Philemon Paca, of Wye House, Wye Island, Maryland, who married Julianna Tilghman; and a daughter who married Consul Roubelle, of France, joint ruler of that country with Napolcon Bonaparte. A son of Consul Roubelle and his Maryland wife bore such a striking likeness to the accepted type of the Christ that he was often called upon by artists to sit for paintings of Our Saviour.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

A descendant of Governor Paca is John Philemon Paca, of Baltimore.

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

BRICE—STEPHEN—MARTIN—ROBB

---

IN the Brice House, Annapolis, we may see one of the most magnificent wedding presents in the history of colonial times, the gift of Thomas Jenings, cousin of Sarah Jenings—that strange figure of English history, first Duchess of Marlborough—to Juliana Jenings on her marriage in 1745 to Col. James Brice, son of John and Sarah Frisby Brice. It is at the intersection of East and Prince George Streets, Annapolis, facing toward the harbor, which it can easily see over the heads of about a city block of little modern houses, and its next door neighbor is the Paca mansion whose garden its own garden formerly adjoined. In the last decade the property was purchased by the proprietors of the hotel in the old homestead built by Governor William Paca, and the thorough renovation given it at that time by its new owners—including, especially, the new paint—revealed charms in the old mansion (tumble-down in the hands of its last owner) not hitherto suspected by any of its acquaintances of this generation. It is now an annex of the adjacent hotel, but has been rented in its entirety for a home by Dr. Paul Quatrebeau, whose family consists of his wife—a very charming hostess in this old house—and a young son. The house is of the conventional Maryland classic style with centre building and wings, and is famous for its size, beauty of proportion, and elaboration of both exterior and interior architectural detail.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The present approach to the house from East Street is, as shown in photographs, of modern construction, the old walk having extended directly from the front door, by way of a terrace, to the pavement, and having a very small stoop to the steps. One of the great beauties of the house is to be seen above the centre doorway in a wonderfully-carved window, whose graceful floral design has excited much enthusiastic admiration.

The interior of the house is rich in carving, plaster work, wrought brass and rare and costly woods used with great skill and in profusion. The stairway is of San Domingo mahogany richened to a lustrous black by the passage of the years, and the pilasters and banisters are light and graceful in design. The latches of the doors inside the house are of very beautifully worked metal. Perhaps the most beautiful single feature of the inner part of the mansion is the state drawing-room, which leads off to the rear from the square hallway upon which the front door opens. In this regal apartment may be found, in especial, a fireplace very generally copied and admired. The fire space is framed with most elaborate and delicate carvings,

MANTEL IN DRAWING-ROOM OF BRICE HOUSE

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

and above is a mantel which in turn supports a finely proportioned plaster panel enclosed with carvings. The cornice of the room is noteworthy for its carving, and the room as a whole is conspicuous for its dignity, spaciousness, and grace, being a worthy setting for the many brilliant social gatherings which it has held, often having, as an honored guest, George Washington, on his frequent visits to Annapolis before the Revolution.

This magnificent mansion was built about 1740. We have the following record of the Jenings family in Maryland, written by James Frisby Brice, a son of this Colonel James, and as quoted by J. D. Warfield in his admirable "Founders of Howard and Anne Arundel Counties:"

Thomas Jenings, my grandfather, was born in England. The place and time of his birth are not known to us; nor do we know the Christian names of his father and mother. The former died when he was quite young. He was a cousin to the Duchess of Marlborough (the first), whose name was Sarah Jenings. He came to this country when nineteen years of age. My brother, Thomas J. Brice, found in the Executive Chamber (Annapolis) a record of his commission as Attorney-General of the state, about the year 1773.

He studied law in England with Mr. James Best, and at his request named a son and daughter for Mr. and Mrs. Best who left them legacies. Elizabeth Jenings was a celebrated beauty. She became Mrs. Hodges of Baltimore. We are related to the family of Edmund Jenings, Secretary of the Province, through his marriage to my great-grandmother, Arian, mother of Sarah Frisby.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Edmund Jenings and wife went to London, where she died. He returned and died in 1757. Their son, Edmund Jenings, remained in England, and wrote to his half-sister, Sarah (Frisby) Brice, for information of the family.

Col. James Brice, a gallant soldier, who was the first master of the Brice House, left a note-book with maps of the battles in which he fought in the Revolution. He had two sons: Thomas Jenings and James Frisby Brice (whose notes we have just read), and a daughter, Juliana Jenings, who married Judge John Stephen of Bladensburg, Maryland, who was the son of the Reverend Stephen of St. Mary's, St. Mary's County, Maryland.

Thomas Jenings Brice, eldest son of Colonel James, was the next occupant of the Brice mansion, and in connection with his name there must be brought up the black pall of tragedy. He was a man of great generosity, and made large provision for his household servants in his will. It is thought that one of them gained knowledge of the will's contents and was overwrought thereby, for one morning the lord of the old home was found dead—murdered, while he was asleep, by a blow on the head from a hammer. Suspicion has always rested on the household servants—though nothing definite was ever proved. Mr. Brice was a bachelor, and at his death the property became the home of his brother, eventually to descend to Nicholas Carroll Stephen, of Bladensburg, Maryland, and Charles W. Stephen, of Baltimore, who in 1873 jointly sold the mansion and its ground to Thomas Ennals Martin, Mayor of Annapolis for several terms, from whom it was inherited by his daughter, Mrs. Louise Martin Robb, by whom, in October, 1911, it was disposed of, with the land outlying, to its present owners.

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

Juliana Jenings Brice, who married Judge Stephen, had eight sons, only one of whom, Nicholas Carroll, had issue. Benjamin D. Stephen, John Stephen, and Mrs. Juliana Jenings Diendonne, of Bladensburg, Maryland, were his heirs.

The Brice family, long conspicuous in Maryland, and now seated in Pennsylvania, as well as in its parent state, originated with Capt. John Brice, who came from Hampshire, England. Let us read, again, in Warfield's valuable work:

From a copy held by Nicholas Brice of Philadelphia, made from Judge Nicholas Brice's record, the following is taken by permission of Mrs. Edith Marden Ridout, of the Severn:

"Captain John Brice came from Hampshire, England. He is recorded as gentleman, merchant, planter, member of the House of Burgesses, Justice of the Peace, and Captain of the Severn Hundred. He married Sarah, widow of Captain John Worthington. His crest and coat of arms, a lion's head, are still extant.

"Captain Brice was guardian for the Worthington heirs, and extended the estate. One son and two daughters were the issue of his marriage to Mrs. Worthington: Ann, who married Vachel Denton; Rachel, who married Philip Hammond, the Annapolis merchant; and John Brice, Jr., Judge of the Provincial Court, who married Sarah Frisby, daughter of James and Ariana (Vanderheyden) Frisby."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Unquestionably the most magnificent colonial home in Annapolis, the entertainments given at the Brice House before the Revolution were of a royal character, and it was an inspiring centre for that quaint, gay life which made the little capital conspicuous socially in the colonial annals of the country, and of which we have such enchanting glimpses in the old homes of Annapolis. Just what were this life and spirit? Whatever we may read or say about these conditions is applicable to the Brice House.

The Abbé Rodin, of France, who visited the colonies just prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, and on his return home wrote such interesting memoirs of his trip in his "Nouveau Voyage dans l'Amérique," after speaking of the elegance of Maryland plantation homes, says of the life in Annapolis:

There appears to be more wealth and luxury in Annapolis than in any other city which I have visited in this country. The extravagance of the women here surpasses that of our own provinces; a French hair-dresser is a man of great importance; one lady here pays her coiffeur a salary of a thousand crowns.

A gifted modern writer, Sidney George Fisher, looking through the years has written of the life in An-

THE BRICE HOUSE

1740

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

Annapolis prior to the Revolution in the following terms in "Colonial Men, Women and Manners:"*

In the harbor of Annapolis in plain sight from most of the houses, lay vessels from all parts of the world, for the little town had its commercial day before the rise of Baltimore. The houses were in the most perfect forms of the colonial architecture. . . . The men and women, who, like the rest of the Maryland gentry, ordered champagne from Europe by the cask, and madeira by the pipe, also dressed expensively in the latest English fashions, and French travellers said that they had seldom seen such clothes outside of Paris. They had French barbers, negro slaves in livery, and drove light carriages, —an extremely rare indulgence in colonial times. The clubs got up excursions, picnics, and fishing parties. Balls were given on all the great English anniversaries, and the birthday of the proprietor and saints' days were used as excuses.

They gambled, of course, after the universal custom of the times, flirted, or pretended to flirt, like the modern Marylander, discussed the last vessels from England, the prospects of the tobacco crop, and the quarrels of the proprietors and the crown. Visitors were frequent from the northern and southern colonies. In spring the wealthy people departed for their manors or country places in great coaches of light yellow color with Venetian windows and projecting lamps.

The history of Annapolis goes back to the year 1649, when it was settled by Puritan refugees from Virginia, who found under Lord Baltimore the liberty of worship which they could not secure elsewhere. In 1683 it was erected into a town, in 1694 became the capital of the colony, and between 1750 and the out-

---

* J. B. Lippincott Company, publishers, Philadelphia.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

break of the Revolution saw its most brilliant days. Though founded by Puritans, so rapidly did it change its character that, in 1749, we find an old record describing it in the following terms:

The outlook of the city was fair and promising, its merchants had secured the chief trade of the province; ships from all seas came to its harbour; its endowed school (King William's) educated its citizens for important positions; its thought made the mind of the province. The gayety of its inhabitants, and their love of refined pleasure had developed the race-course, the theatre, the ball-room; their love of learning, the Gazette and King William's school; creations and enterprises that made the province famous in after years as the centre of the social pleasures, of the culture and of the refinement of the American colonies.

It is in the letters of William Eddis, published by him in London in 1792, under the patronage of "many influential personages," that we can best visit Annapolis, however. This prolific correspondent was one of the commissioners of the loan office of Maryland by proprietary appointment, and whatever he saw he seems to have recorded and sent "home" in his voluminous outpourings to relatives and friends in England. He describes his impressions on landing at Annapolis, his presence at balls, his opinions on prominent men. Like Pepys, nothing human seems to have been too trivial for him to set down.

He goes to the Governor's ball in February, 1770, shortly after his arrival in Annapolis, and is much impressed. The ladies' manners and converse also strike him, as do the winter sports of the little city:

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

On Saturday last, our little city appeared in all its splendour. It was the anniversary of the proprietary's birth. The Governor gave a grand entertainment on the occasion to a numerous party; the company brought with them every disposition to render each other happy, and the festivity concluded with cards and dancing, which engaged the attention of their respective votaries till an early hour.

I am persuaded there is not a town in England of the same size as Annapolis, which can boast of a greater number of fashionable and handsome women; and, were I not satisfied to the contrary, I should suppose that the majority of our belles possessed every advantage of a long and familiar intercourse with the manners and habits of your great metropolis.

During the winter there are assemblies every fortnight, the room for dancing is large, the construction elegant, and the whole illuminated to great advantage. At each extremity are apartments for the card tables, where select companies enjoy the circulation of the parti-colored gentry, without having their attention diverted by the sound of fiddles and the evolutions of youthful performers.

About Christmas an intense frost set in, which has continued till a few days since, with unremitting severity. Our principal rivers, for several weeks, have been passable for carriages heavily laden; and in particular situations, innumerable skaters have exhibited on the glassy surface their feats of dexterity.

January 18, 1771.—In a former letter, I attempted to convey some idea of the truly picturesque and beautiful situation of our little capital. Several of the most opulent families have here established their residence; and hospitality is characteristic of the inhabitants. Party prejudices have little influence on social intercourse; the grave and ancient enjoy the blessings of a respectable society, while the young and gay have various amusements to engage their hours of relaxation, and to promote that mutual connection so essential to their future happiness.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

You will know that I have ever been strongly attached to the rational entertainments resulting from theatrical exhibitions. When I bade farewell to England, I little expected that my passion for the drama could have been gratified, in any tolerable degree, at a distance so remote from the great mart of genius; and I brought with me strong prepossessions in behalf of favorite performers, whose merits were fully established by the universal sanction of intelligent judges. My pleasure and my surprise were therefore excited in proportion, on finding performers in this country equal, at least, to those who sustain the best of the first characters in your most celebrated provincial theatres.

He finds that the "phantom" of pleasure is pursued with avidity:

November 2, 1771.—In this remote region, my dear friend, the phantom pleasure is pursued with as much avidity as on your side of the Atlantic, and certainly with as much gratification, except by the injudicious herd who form ideas of happiness from comparison alone.

Our races, which are just concluded, continued four days, and afforded excellent amusement to those who are attached to the pleasures of the turf; and, surprising as it may appear, I assure you there are few meetings in England better attended, or where more capital horses are exhibited. . . .

Nothing could excel the charming serenity of the weather during these races, in consequence of which there was a prodigious concourse of spectators, and considerable sums were depending on the contest of each day. On the first, a purse of one hundred guineas was run for, free only for the members of the club; and on the three following days subscription purses of fifty pounds each. Assemblies, and theatrical representations, were the amusements of the evening, at which the company exhibited a fashionable and brilliant appearance.

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

December 24, 1771.—Whatever you have heard relative to the rigid puritanical principles and economical habits of our American brethren is by no means true when applied to the inhabitants of the southern provinces. Liberality of sentiment and genuine hospitality are everywhere prevalent; and I am persuaded they too frequently mistake profuseness for generosity, and impair their wealth and their fortunes, by splendour of appearance and magnificence of entertainment.

The quick importation of fashions from the mother country is really astonishing. I am almost inclined to believe that a new fashion is adopted earlier by the polished and affluent Americans than by many opulent persons in the great metropolis; nor are opportunities wanting to display superior elegance. We have varied amusements and numerous parties, which afford to the young, the gay, and the ambitious, an extensive field to contend in the race of vain and idle competition. In short, very little difference is, in reality, observable in the manners of the wealthy colonist and the wealthy Briton.

It is but just to confess that the American ladies possess a natural ease and elegance in the whole of their deportment; and that, while they assiduously cultivate external accomplishments, they are still anxiously attentive to the more important embellishments of the mind. In conversation they are generally animated and entertaining, and deliver their sentiments with affability and propriety. In a word, there are, throughout these colonies, very many lovely women, who have never been beyond the bounds of their respective provinces, and yet, I am persuaded, might appear to great advantage in the most brilliant circles of gaiety and fashion.

One of the frequent visitors to Annapolis during its days of gaiety before the Revolution was General

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Washington, then in the service of Virginia. In one of Eddis' later letters, written during the turmoil of the first days of the Revolution, he speaks of his appointment as commander-in-chief of the army of the colonies by the Continental Congress, with whom, he goes on to say:

"beneath the hospitable roof of our worthy Governor, I have so frequently shared the hour of social and sentimental discourse. Little did I then conceive that he was destined to be called forth by the united voice of America, from the private occupation of domestic tranquillity, to direct hostile operations against the measures of the British Government. Reserved in conversation, but liberal in opinion, his actions have, hitherto, been directed by calmness and moderation."

A sidelight on the polite life of Annapolis before the Revolution may be found in the advertising columns of the Maryland Gazette published by Jonas Green, Esq. Here, for instance, is one who offers himself as a servant. His qualifications are that he "can wait at table, curry horses, clean knives, boots and shoes, lay a table, shave, and dress wigs, carry a lantern and talk French." He is "as honest as the times will admit, and as sober as can be."

Richard Wagstaffe,—

peruke and lady's tate-maker, wishes to announce that he will soon settle in Annapolis and follow the said business, and will sell his goods at reasonable rates. He also intends to teach reading, writing and accounts; and will take in youth to board and educate at twenty-three pounds per year. N.B.—He has a few perukes ready made which he will dispose of very cheap, such as Ramillies, Albemarle and Bols, etc.

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

The profession of clock-mender seems to have been one without many professors, as the following advertisement will signify:

Whereas John Powell was advertised last week in this paper as a runaway, but only being gone into the country a cider drinking, and being returned again to his master's service, these are therefore to acquaint all gentlemen and others, who have any watches or clocks to repair, that they may have them done in the best manner at reasonable rates.

Perhaps no such unique souvenir of colonial days exists as the records of the "Tuesday Club," of Annapolis, preserved in the rooms of the Maryland Historical Society of Baltimore. These cover a period of years. The club was an organization of the wits and influential men of the city. Formed with no other purpose than that of good fellowship, it met every Tuesday in regular alternation at the homes of the members, who in turn provided the refreshments, which consisted of a "gammon of bacon, or any one other dish of vituals and no more," and such drinkables as might be proved necessary. Offensive topics of conversation were dealt with by the "gelastic" method, that is, every man present except the one (or ones) talking burst into a hearty fit of laughter, which they kept up until a new theme of discourse was brought up. Politics was absolutely barred, as a subject of talk, from the gatherings. The first toast, it was ordered, should be "The Ladies," after that "The King," and then "The Deluge." From the records of the club, let us glance at "the humble petition and remonstrance of sundry of the single females of Annapolis" to the "Honorable President," then Charles Cole. This sheweth that—

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Whereas, it has been observed by sundry persons as well as your petitioners, that a singular and surprising success has all along attended such happy females as your honor has been pleased to pitch upon as the toasts of the honorable chair, every one of whom in a short time after having been adopted by your honor has successfully and happily been provided with a much more eligible estate, your petitioners, therefore, earnestly pray that your honor, instead of conferring your favors in so partial a manner, would, in consideration of our desperate situation, include us all in the circle of favor that the benign influence of your honor's meritorious notice may henceforth shine upon us all.

The Honorable President declared that he would grant this petition as far as lay in his power.

Jonas Green, the venerable publisher of the Maryland Gazette, seems to have found himself in ill-favor at one session of the club, for we find that,.....

after reading the sentence, during which Jonas Green, Esq., stood up, His Lordship knocked upon the table with a little mallet after the manner of Sir Hugh McCarty, Esq., Lord President of the Monday Club of New York, and this signal being given, the Sargeant-at-Arms took Jonas Green, Esq., into custody, and he was confined for a full half hour, a languishing prisoner in one corner of the room, being deprived of all comfort and assistance from the sparkling and enlivening board, a woeful and lamentable spectacle, and a warning to all loyal members to be upon their good behaviour.

---

THE BRICE HOUSE

---

The entry was made that William Thornton, because of his wonderful talent for singing, was created by unanimous vote, "Proto-Musicus," and that "it is ordained that, as often as he votes in club, he is to sing his vote in a musical manner, else it is to go for nothing."

Alas, this gay life had to end! With the outbreak of the Revolution the cavalier days of the "Athens of America" left, to return no more, some of the actors on its little stage taking part in the great conflict just opening, others going "home" to the mother country; and from this time on the little city's importance as the social capital of the country dwindled. It was an aristocrat in tradition and did not survive the inauguration of the great experiment in democracy. Thus passed the glory of the Brice mansion and its neighbors.

---

RIDOUT HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

RIDOUT

---

HE Ridout House, Annapolis, is situated on Duke of Gloucester Street, not far from the water front. It is a two-story building without wings, and is chiefly remarkable architecturally for the very beautiful garden doorway which graces the rear of the structure. It was built in 1768 by John Ridout, Secretary to Governor Sharpe, for his bride, Mary Ogle, whom he married in 1765.

The garden doorway consists of a large portico at the head of a long flight of steps leading from the garden. Above it is a fine Palladian window, whose apex breaks the cornice of the house. The garden, itself, is a beautiful spot to-day, though not so lovely as when the house was new. It consists of a series of terraces to the water-front street of Annapolis, and in other days led direct to the water itself.

The interior of the house contains much fine carving. As you enter the reception hall through the simple Georgian front door, the stairway is to the left; to the right is the dining-room. In the rear of the first floor are two rooms, a study and a parlour, to the latter of which the garden doorway gives entrance.

The house contains a rich store of old furniture and colonial souvenirs. On the heavy old sideboard in the dining-room are two mahogany knife-boxes and a spoon urn of mahogany made in the same style as the knife-boxes. In the hall is the table at which the owner of the house so often dined, and a harpsichord that was sent, in 1764, as a wedding present from Lady Essex in England to her cousin, Mary Ogle, in the New World. The work table of Mary Ogle's mother is still to be seen in a sunny window of the library, overlooking the terraced garden in which she spent so much of her time.

---

RIDOUT HOUSE

---

There is no more romantic story in the annals of old Annapolis than that of the rise to fortune in the New World of young John Ridout, Governor Sharpe's secretary and bosom friend. He is first to be seen in Annapolis when Horatio Sharpe arrived early on the morning of Thursday, August 16, 1753, to take up his duties as proprietary governor in the Province of Maryland. Accompanying Sharpe, also, was Dr. Upton Scott, builder of the Scott House of Annapolis, and founder of another family in Maryland which has been conspicuous in public and private life.

John Ridout was at this time twenty-one years of age. He was a grave, sober, older-than-his-years young man, who had spent the preceding six years of his life at the University of Oxford, England, and had taken high honors as a Greek and Latin student. We have the following record of the Ridout family in Lady

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Edgar's (herself a Ridout connection) invaluable work, "A Colonial Governor in Maryland:"

The Ridouts (spelt also Rideout), of Sherborne, were descendants of Thomas Ridout of Henstridge, Somerset. The family came originally from France from the neighborhood of Fontainebleau and settled in England about the middle of the sixteenth century.

In Hutchins' "Visitation of the Somerset," now in the College of Arms, London, mention is made of the granting of a coat-of-arms, in 1551, to Thomas Ridout of Henstridge. These arms bear a striking resemblance to those borne by the de Ridouts de Sance (see Hozier's Armorial General of the French Nobility), near Fontainebleau.

In the will of Walter Ridout, of Langlin, Dorset, a descendant of Thomas, dated 1582, among other legacies he bequeaths a large sum of money to the church at Fontainebleau. Christopher Ridout, son of Thomas, was baptized at Henstridge, Somerset, 24th November, 1664, and settled in Sherborne, Dorset. His eldest son, George, born at Sherborne in 1702, was the father of the John Ridout who came to America with Horatio Sharpe.

Another descendant of Thomas, of Henstridge, settled in Bristol, and mention is made in Hutchins' of the marriage in 1674, of Susannah, daughter of John Ridout, of Bristol, to Thomas Strangways, of Melbury, Dorsetshire. Their granddaughter, Elizabeth, married Stephen Fox, who was created Earl of Ilchester.

Young Ridout entered immediately upon his duties, and with such devotion and intelligence that he soon became his master's mainstay. In 1757, he was sent on a mission to the Cherokee Indians in western Maryland in company with Mr. Daniel Westenholme, one of the most important men of the province, and with a wagon-load of presents, to secure their alliance with the English as opposed to the French in the French and Indian wars then raging. This was a very important undertaking, and the fact that young Ridout was despatched upon it four years after his arrival in the province shows how rapid was his rise to favour with Governor Sharpe.

---

RIDOUT HOUSE

---

Three years after this he was made a member of the Governor's Council, and this so incited the jealousy of certain individuals of the province that they wrote a long letter of expostulation to Secretary Calvert. Governor Sharpe defended his protégé in the following reply:

I am confident there is not a gentleman in the Province, acquainted with Mr. Ridout, who does not condemn the author for expressing himself after that manner. He is, I am satisfied, well esteemed by most of the Principal people in the Province that know him, particularly the gentlemen of the Council. Who, pray, are said to be those persons of Rank, Fortune, and Superior Capacity whose long course of important services have gone unrewarded? If there are any, either in or out of the Council, who have devoted as much time to the business of his Lordship and the Government as Mr. Ridout hath already done, who are better acquainted with the Constitution or political history of the Province, and have so much inclination to serve his Lordship, the Letter writer would have done well to point them out.

In this letter, too, is the first mention of Ridout's

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

proposed marriage to Mary Ogle, daughter of former Governor Samuel Ogle and Anne Tasker, whose father, Benjamin Tasker, was one of the most notable figures in the early history of Maryland. An alliance with her family would make Ridout's position in the New World absolutely unassailable. Sharpe continues indignantly:

Even his not having been born in Maryland was mentioned as what ought to have been an insuperable objection to his promotion; and as he had no family connection or large estate here it was insinuated that he had no inducement to consult and promote the welfare of the Province. As Mr. Ridout is with my consent and approbation, as well as with that of Mr. Tasker, her grandfather and guardian, about to make an alliance with the eldest daughter and eldest child of the late Governor Ogle, those who may have hitherto considered him an alien, and not interested in the Prosperity of the Province, will not long have an opportunity of mentioning his want of connections here as either a fault or a misfortune.

If tradition be true, Governor Sharpe's fine scorn was an evidence of the magnanimity of his character, as he, himself, was said to be in love with the fair Mary Ogle. Whether this story be true or not, he spent his life a bachelor, and throughout the rest of his days showed a most devoted interest in the Ridouts and their children.

In 1765, John Ridout was married to Mary Ogle, and took his young bride to the beautiful old house on Duke of Gloucester Street.

Here they entertained lavishly, and brought many a

ENTRANCE TO THE RIDOUT HOUSE
1763

---

RIDOUT HOUSE

---

brilliant company together within their doors. That George Washington before the Revolution was a guest of Mr. Ridout's is evidenced by extracts from his diary:

September, 1771.—On a visit to Annapolis. September 24th.—Dined with the Governor and went to the Play and the Ball afterwards. September 25th.—Dined at Doctor Stewart's and went to the Play and Ball afterwards. September 26th.—Dined at Mr. Ridout's and went to the Play. September 27th.—Dined at Mr. Carroll's and went to the Ball. September 28th.—Dined at Mr. Boucher's and went from there to the Play and afterwards to the Coffee House.

October 4th, 1772.—Set off for the Annapolis Races. Dined and Lodged at Mr. Boucher's. October 5th.—Reached Annapolis. Dined at the Coffee House with the Kosky Club and lodged at the Governor's after going to the Play. October 6th.—Dined at Major Jenifer's, went to the Ball, and Supped at the Governor's. October 7th.—Dined at the Governor's and went to the Play afterwards. October 8th.—Dined at Mr. Lloyd's and went to the Play; from thence early to my Lodgings. October 9th.—Dined at Mr. Ridout's, and went to the Play and to the Governor's to supper. October 10th.—Dined with Mr. Carroll of Carrollton, and set out for Mr. Boucher's, at which place I arrived about eight o'clock. October 11th.—Got home to a late dinner; John Parke Custis came with me.

September 26th, 1773.—I set off for the Annapolis Races. Dined at Mr. Rollin's and got into Annapolis between five and six o'clock. Spent the evening and lodged at the Governor's. September 27th.—Dined at the Governor's and went to the Play in the Evening. September 28th.—Again dined at the Governor's and went to the Play and the Ball in the Evening. September 29th.—Dined at Mr. Sprigg's and went to the Play in the Evening. September 30th.—Dined at Mr. Ridout's and spent the afternoon. Supped at Mr. Jenifer's and spent the Evening. October 1st.—Still at Annapolis. Dined with Mr. Ogle. Spent the Evening at the Governor's. October 2nd.—Set off on my return home. Dined at Marlborough and Lodged at home. Mr. Custis came with me.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

In the troublous days which preceded the Revolution, Ridout stood loyal to the crown, and threw all of his influence towards reconciliation with the mother country. That his efforts were very powerful is evidenced by the fact that Samuel Chase, called the "torch of the Revolution," and his adherents had the greatest difficulty in obtaining the vote of the Assembly for independence.

When Sharpe went to England in 1773, he appointed Ridout his agent in this country, and, when the outbreak of the Revolution came, Ridout retired to Whitehall, Sharpe's country home, closing up his town house in Annapolis. His servants were drafted for the war, and the price of provisions became exorbitant, so, with Mrs. Ridout, he took refuge in a log cabin at Tonoloway, Virginia, on the Potomac River. His son Horace was sent to a boarding school in Frederick County, three thousand pounds of the Continental currency being paid for his education. As, in 1780, Continental money had fallen in value to two cents on the dollar, this sum was not so prodigious as it first seems.

In 1789, Mr. Ridout made arrangements for a long-deferred trip to England to visit Colonel Sharpe, and actually made embarkation from Alexandria, but the ship sprung a leak after being out two weeks, and was obliged to return. In 1790, came the sad news of Horatio Sharpe's death at Hampstead, England, in the seventy-second year of his age. Ridout survived his friend only seven years, dying in 1797 at the age of sixty-five years. He was laid to rest at Whitehall, which, as has been told in another chapter, was left to him by the will of Governor Sharpe.

---

RIDOUT HOUSE

---

The issue of John Ridout and Mary Ogle, his wife, were two sons and a daughter: Samuel, Horatio, and Anne Tasker (Ridout).

Samuel, the eldest son, was educated abroad, and on his return entered Mr. Stone's office in Annapolis for the study of law. He married, in 1790, Mary Grafton Addison, a descendant of Col. John Addison, brother of the famous William Addison, and died, in 1840, in the old house on Duke of Gloucester Street where he was born. His grandson, Dr. William Grafton Ridout, is the present holder of the old mansion. Dr. Ridout's family consists of his son, Dr. John Ridout, and a daughter, Mrs. Ligon, of Howard County, Maryland.

Horatio Ridout, John Ridout's second son, married Rachel Goldsborough, and lived at Whitehall.

---

SCOTT HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

SCOTT—KEY—BIRNEY—CLAUDE—SISTERS OF MERCY —SISTERS OF NÔTRE DAME

---

HE most beautiful hallway among all of the exquisite colonial mansions in Annapolis, Maryland, is to be found in the Scott House, on Shipwright Street, now the home of the Sisters of Nôtre Dame. It is a square hallway about thirty feet each way, with stairs on the right descending away from the door. Immediately facing the entrance is an arch beneath which a small hall leads to the back door. Flanking the front door on each side are sunny windows. All of the woodwork of the hall and the stair is wonderfully carved in a design whose grace, precision, and charm have been commented upon and admired by many artists.

The house is two and a half stories in height and is a square, single structure without wings. The grounds around it have been excellently maintained and in the rear is a garden which is worked by the Sisters of Nôtre Dame. The front door is very simple in construction and chaste in design and resembles greatly the main doorway of Montpelier, the old Snowden homestead in Prince George's County.

Inside the house the rooms on the first floor are ar-

THE SCOTT HOUSE
c. 1765

---

SCOTT HOUSE

---

ranged symmetrically with regard to the hallway—two on each side—and the disposition of the rooms on the floor above is very similar. In the rear room on the second floor to the right, Governor Eden, the last proprietary executive of Maryland, died, on his visit to Annapolis immediately after the termination of the Revolutionary War. This room is now used as a chapel by the Sisters and is rarely shown to visitors.

The Scott House was built by Upton Scott, physician to Governor Horatio Sharpe, of Maryland, about 1760, upon his marriage to the heiress, Elizabeth Ross, daughter of John Ross, of Frederick County. He accompanied the beloved bachelor governor of Maryland to this country, in 1753, and had, as his companions and as fellow-venturers with Sharpe, John Ridout, founder of the Ridout family in Maryland, and Daniel Wostenholme, progenitor of another distinguished line in the state.

Doctor Upton Scott was born in the year 1722 at Temple Patrick, County Antrim, Ireland, and received his early education at Dublin University. After graduation he served as a surgeon under General, then Colonel, Wolfe in Scotland. During this campaign he met and formed a friendship for the future governor of Maryland. In order to accompany Sharpe to the New World, he gave up his commission, bearing with him to America, as a token of remembrance from

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

General Wolfe, a pair of pistols now in the possession of Major Rogers Birnie, of the Ordnance, U. S. A.

When Governor Sharpe died in 1789, he appointed Scott one of the trustees of his will, with Benjamin Ogle as his associate.

The father of Elizabeth Ross, Doctor Scott's bride, was the Register of the Land Office of Maryland and was the builder of Belvoir, the beautiful old homestead at the head of the Severn River, not far from Annapolis, which has been long associated with the name of Worthington. Elizabeth's sister was Ann Arnold Ross Key, grandmother of Francis Scott Key.

So famous did Doctor Scott become as a physician that he was frequently sent for on consultation from the other colonies of America and it is said that when General Wolfe lay dying at Quebec he expressed a wish to have his old comrade prescribe for him. He lived to a green old age, dying when he had rounded out ninety years of life. He was buried at Cemetery Creek, Annapolis, where his tombstone may still be seen. The inscription on his grave is simple and reads:

Dr. Upton Scott, died 1814, aged 92 years. Native of Antrim, Ireland, and for 60 years a distinguished and respected inhabitant of this city.

His wife's tomb is near and the inscription reads:

In memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Scott, beloved and respected by all who knew her, died 1819, 80 years.

ENTRANCE HALL OF SCOTT HOUSE

---

SCOTT HOUSE

---

After the death of its first master and mistress, the old homestead was held by the Keys and Birneys, their nearest of kin and heirs, and shortly passed into the hands of Mr. Dennis Claude, from whom it was purchased by the Sisters of Mercy about the middle of the last century and from whom, in turn, it shortly went to the Sisters of Nôtre Dame, who have been settled in it for nearly fifty years.

During its occupancy by its first mistress the old homestead often held a figure destined to fame. This was the boy, Francis Scott Key, whose great-aunt Mrs. Upton Scott was. He spent much of his boyhood in Annapolis and lived a great deal of that time with Mrs. Scott. A descendant of Francis Scott Key of Annapolis, to-day, is Mrs. Habersham, of Charles Street, whose daughter is Miss Ellen Key Habersham. In her house is to be found some of the furniture which graced the Scott House many years ago, and which was inherited by Francis Scott Key upon the death of his great-aunt.

---

BORDLEY, OR RANDALL, HOUSE

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

BORDLEY—RANDALL

---

O visitor to Annapolis fails to make mental note of the Randall House hidden away in its little court; and a beautiful picture it forms to carry away in the camera of the mind from the ancient city to be developed in some drowsy hour when one goes wandering through the realm of recollection. A description of it has been written by the late T. Henry Randall, an architect, and may be given in his words:

Looking to the north from the State House and hidden among locusts, poplars and magnolia trees, we see the Randall House, erected about 1730 by Thos. Bordley. It stands in the midst of a charmingly old-fashioned garden, with lawns in front and diverging walks behind, lined with flower beds and high box borders and possessing, in its great stretch of front, some of the most striking characteristics of an Annapolis home, besides the peculiarity of being in the centre of its own grounds and not on the street. That part of the main house beyond the sitting-room has been added within the present generation (to take the place of a frame addition that was removed), but it so thoroughly carries out the characteristics of the plans of its day in its arrangement that no one would suspect that this later portion was not of the same date as the rest.

The front hall, as in the case of two other examples (the Ridout and the Brice houses), is not on a centre with the axis of the house, and the staircase rises directly from the entrance with a most charming rail, wainscot and balusters in French walnut or mahogany. The library is in the wing connecting with the parlor and is placed a few feet below its level, forming a most interesting and attractive room. It opens upon the garden, on one side, and upon the conservatory, on the other, and its ceiling follows the lines of the roof above, giving unusual height and a charming effect.

---

BORDLEY, OR RANDALL, HOUSE

---

On the front of this house, and running its full length, once stood a row of columns supporting the projecting eaves and resting upon a long porch that has long ago disappeared and with it a charming façade, such as one always associates with the houses much further south than Maryland.

Contrary to Mr. Randall's notes, however, the old homestead was not built by Thomas Bordley but by Stephen Bordley, his son, as is very clearly shown by an examination of the records of the Bordley family. Thomas Bordley, the first of his name in Maryland, and of ancient English family, came to Maryland in 1694 and died in 1726, four years before the date of erection of the home. He came to Annapolis unknown and without means, and by his own sturdy qualities raised himself to a position of affluence in that busy little city. He was a busy man and with little leisure. It was his son, Stephen, the merry bachelor, of whom tradition is busy, who built the mansion now known as the Randall House and who had the time to devote to the building of the homestead.

There are many letters preserved of this Stephen Bordley, and some of them have been published in the very interesting "Notes on the Bordley Family" prepared by Mrs. Elizabeth Bordley Gibson, of Philadelphia, Pa., edited by her niece Elizabeth Mifflin, and published some years ago. A pleasant picture is drawn by Mrs. Gibson of the builder of the mansion:

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

This worthy old bachelor, for such he remained, was a great favourite amongst the ladies of the first circle of Annapolis where his society and conversation were much sought after—they smiled at his primitive and precise politeness, but justly admired his wit, good sense and good humour. . . . He resided in the old family house, on taking possession of which he sent to England for complete sets of household furniture, plate and so forth. Its noblest furniture, however, was an extensive law and miscellaneous library, amply stocked with the best editions of well-selected works, in various languages, to which he was constantly adding—and reading as he added; his opinions, showing a good critical taste of the different authors and subjects of the day, are largely expressed in some of his familiar letters; he seems always to have read to some good purpose, and neither law nor politics could conquer his favourite pursuit of general knowledge. As a lawyer he stood high and though surrounded in that day by able competitors, his practice was very extensive. . . . There seemed nothing wanting to his happiness but a wife! Like many of his brotherhood, he was an admirer of the fair sex and fond of being rallied for his admiration of handsome individuals among them, though we believe he was only once in sober earnest on this subject. He acquired some quaint old bachelor peculiarities. . . .

Writing to England to his Aunts Mary and Elizabeth Bordley, Stephen Bordley gives us an entertaining picture of his family and the home life in this charming old mansion about the year 1787:

---

BORDLEY, OR RANDALL, HOUSE

---

I have two own Brothers and one Sister; the eldest is my Brother Will, who has now been of age some time and is very capable of doing for himself in that kind of life which, in my opinion, is by far the most happy; I mean that of a Planter, it affording a good income and being destitute of the noise and bustle and stir which attends those who are obliged to lead their lives amongst great numbers of people; and where livelihood, of course, depends upon the smiles of those who . . . are often inclined to frown; whilst the honest peaceable labour and industry of the other procure him a sweet and pleasant and independent repose, affording him not only a certain means of living, but likewise of living well. My Brother Johnny is now about 16 and still at school here, intending for the same kind of employment with his Brother Will. My Sister Bett is between 19 and 20 and is one for whose sake alone I could choose to live, and should have but little inclination to continue here after the happening of anything to deprive me of her; or to lessen that affection which I now bear her, and which I think I ought, so long as she continues to do nothing whereby she may forfeit it. She is still single and in my opinion, since she has a fortune independent of any one, she will be best off while she continues so; tho' I would not be understood as if I was against her marrying, if she were so inclined; but only to let you see that I think there are so few men who may be trusted with the happiness of a woman of education or delicacy, that the hazard is not worth running; and of this she herself is sensible; indeed there are very few to whom I could trust her. I am, likewise, still single; and at present continue so, as well to avoid the noise and uneasiness of a large family and the continual labour and fatigue of providing fortunes to be left them at my death, as the lessening of my power of doing for my dear Bett anything that may contribute towards making her happy.

From Stephen Bordley, the Bordley or Randall

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

House descended to his "Sister Bett" upon his death in 1764. Elizabeth Bordley died in 1789 and at her death left the mansion to her half-brother—the only surviving member of her generation—John Beale Bordley of The Vineyard, Wye Island, Talbot County, Maryland. Not long after the latter's death in 1804, the house was sold to John Randall, Esq., the first of his name in Annapolis, and with his family it has been associated ever since that time.

Concerning this founder of a distinguished line of sons of Maryland, J. D. Warfield, the historian of Anne Arundel and Howard counties, has to say:

He was the youngest son of Thomas Randall who came from England in the early part of the century, settled in Westmoreland County, Virginia, and married Jane Davis. . . . John put himself under the tutelage of Mr. Buckley of Fredericksburg, an architect and builder who designed and constructed many of the most celebrated public buildings in Maryland and Virginia.

He settled in Annapolis after the Revolution, married Deborah Knapp, of that city, and died in 1826 survived by his widow and thirteen children, of whom Alexander Randall was the inheritor of the homestead. Upon the death of the latter in 1881, the property was divided among his children, and the house is now part of the estate of the late John Wirt Randall, of Annapolis, who died in August, 1912, after a long and distinguished life of public service. His widow is the mistress of the mansion.

---

WHITEHALL

SANDY POINT, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, MARYLAND

SHARPE—RIDOUT—STORY

---

O considerations of economy of money or space hampered the building of Whitehall, the colonial home of Governor Horatio Sharpe, on Sandy Point, about nine miles out of Annapolis. Its builder was not bound by the limits of a city lot or of a narrow purse. His eye was ever towards comfort, beauty and utility. So, to-day, the old home in its royal isolation is a beautiful exponent of the highest culture of the days before the Revolution.

Of late years Whitehall was in rather a dilapidated condition, but since its purchase for a summer home by Mrs. W. G. Story, of Washington City, it has been restored in the smallest detail to its original condition, and is one of the finest examples of the best class of colonial homes.

The road to Whitehall from Annapolis leads through a beautiful rolling country with many streams and little bays. It carries you through scenes associated with events in the earliest days of the province of Maryland. There is the little hamlet of Saint Margaret's, where one of the earliest parishes of Maryland was established. The very names on the little tin letter-boxes are historic—Duvall, Ridout, Dorsey—they each have their significance to the lover of things colonial in Maryland. At last you come to a sharp turning. There is a long, straight lane at right angles to the road along which you have been driving, at the far end of which, about a mile away, you can discern a white object. This lane leads to Whitehall and the white object in view is the old-time bar fence encircling this approach to the grounds.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The original tract on which Whitehall stands contained one thousand acres. The house is not now lord of so much ground. It dominates only the extreme point of the peninsula on which it stands—about sixty acres. The home lot is enclosed in a high old-time bar fence, kept so white with whitewash that it glimmers in the dark. On one side of the house is Meredith Cove; on the other, White Hall Creek. The house itself faces the junction of these two bodies of water where they form a bay, having a most beautiful vista, between the lines of the garden laid out by Governor Sharpe almost a century and a half ago. "Meredith Cove" and "White Hall Creek,"—the names do not sound imposing, but in reality the cove and creek to which they are attached are rather large bodies of water. They are directly tributary to the Chesapeake, just beyond their juncture, and give an easy and direct access to or from Annapolis.

The house is built in the familiar Georgian model of simple main structure with wings, and its greatest charm

WHITEHALL, FROM THE GARDEN

---

WHITEHALL

---

is to be looked for in the elaboration of each of its separate parts. It is large in dimension, but is so beautifully proportioned and so well situated on its little rolling crest of land that its size does not at once impress the visitor. Perhaps the greatest compliment that could be paid it is to say that it seems a natural part of the land on which it stands.

The wings of the house have been set back so that they are in line with the front of the house. They are square and one story in height. The ends of the main body are of semi-octagonal shape, so that there are no abrupt lines. A series of round bull's-eyes painted white give the back of the house a strange, exotic appearance, and contrast very markedly with the frail, slender, straight lines of the doorway and right-angled steps leading down in the enclosure here. The front door is marked by four huge columns of stone painted white, extending from the ground to the second floor, and supporting a heavy Grecian canopy.

Back of the house is the old garden where Governor Sharpe had the plants and flowers which he loved. He was a most enthusiastic gardener, and his letters to friends in England contain frequent requests for slips and cuttings of bushes and shrubs from the Mother Country. The garden is as beautiful to-day, owing to careful cultivation by its present-day mistress, as it was when the bachelor Governor of Maryland held domain, and it is the first sight which greets the visitor who approaches the house by land. It is bounded by a white bar fence of the style used in all parts of the grounds and which makes a semicircle around the garden with the back of the house as the base of the segment of the circle. From the garden, lead the Willow Walk, the Locust Walk, and the Crêpe Myrtle Walk, each of which carries one through a shaded and beautiful path to the water front.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

In the old days, it was a frequent amusement for parties of young people to come from Annapolis by boat to the home of the bachelor governor and hold impromptu dances. The story has been repeated that at Whitehall, Mary Ridout, sister of Governor Sharpe's secretary, John Ridout, danced with George Washington—then a colonel in the provincial militia—while Benjamin Franklin played the tune on the musical glasses. The outhouses, among which may be numbered the homes of the slaves, are continued in a straight line with the house, and are set off in square lots of ground with white fences. The view of the old home from the water, with its commanding white pillars, its quaint and leisurely wings and white outhouses, is charming. The bricks of the house are set in the familiar Flemish bond, and it is said that they were manufactured in Governor Sharpe's own brickyards established on his property for the benefit of himself and his friends. There are no remains of this yard to be seen now, but the story has a ring of probability. The bricks, themselves, have a

ENTRANCE TO PARLOUR, WHITEHALL

---

WHITEHALL

---

rather rough-cast appearance, and are distinctly smaller than those in other homes of the same period, which, reliable traditions assert, were brought from England. Taken in its entirety, the old home, with its white fences and neat enclosures, its old gardens and general indefinable air of serenity, well-being, and good content, is very charming.

There is a pathetic story of the interior of the house. On entering, the visitor is at once struck by the superb and abundant wood-carving to be seen wherever this form of decoration might be used. You are to know that it was all done by a young redemptioner sent to the colonies, who had aroused Governor Sharpe's pity on account of his youth, and who had been taken into that gentleman's household service. He showed great aptitude in wood-carving, and was offered his freedom by the governor if he would decorate Whitehall. This he set out to do, and laboured long and patiently until the whole house was filled with these marvels of minute scrolls of wood of the most perfect design and good taste. He never told anyone where he learned his art, or anything about his past. When freedom was within his reach, and his task was wholly completed, he was stricken by a sudden illness and died. The New World offered him little but adversity, yet the influence of his perfect work will probably last longer than the memory of his noble patron.

One cannot enter Whitehall without being impressed with the thought of its builder. The stories of his liberalities come to mind. You recall how he is said to have built a cotton mill on his property and have imported wool from flocks of sheep in old England that cloth might be woven for the comfort of his negro servants. You remember passages of sage philosophy in his voluminous correspondence with his master, Lord Baltimore. The house speaks of good cheer. Here was one who had solved the art of the secret of living, indeed! In the dining-room is his portrait painted in the style of Godfrey Kneller—probably by one of his pupils. It shows a beak-nosed man in cavalier costume. He wears a laced waistcoat which comes nearly to the knee, and the pockets and sleeve flaps are large and ridiculous. Around his slender hands hang lace ruffles.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The interior of the house is but one room deep in the central portion, though the wings contain rather more space from front to back. The main hallway, which is also a state reception room, is carried on up through the second floor and is a high, square apartment whose lofty ceiling is curved above the cornice. Here the most elaborate ornamentation of the whole house is to be found. In each of the four corners above the cornice in the curved ceiling are set large Satyric faces carved in black mahogany, an ideal detail for a bachelor's home. In the middle of the ceiling is a golden eagle which holds up the slender chain supporting the chandelier.

INTERIOR CARVING, ENTRANCE TO WHITEHALL

---

WHITEHALL

---

To the right of this hall, as you enter from the front, is the dining-room; to the left is the parlour.

How Whitehall was regarded by a contemporary of Governor Sharpe is shown in one of the letters of William Eddis, the voluminous chronicler of pre-revolutionary Annapolis who, under date of October 1, 1769, writes a friend in England:

In the vicinity of Annapolis are many pleasant villas, whose proprietors are eminent for their hospitality. Colonel Sharpe, the late governor, possesses a most delightful retirement, about seven miles distant; his house is on a large scale, the design is excellent, and the apartments well fitted up, and perfectly convenient. The adjacent grounds are so judiciously disposed, that utility and taste are everywhere happily united; and when the worthy owner has completed his extensive plan, Whitehall will be one of the most desirable situations in this, or in any of the neighbouring provinces.

Colonel Sharpe has resided many years in this country, where he has established a reputation which reflects the highest honour on his public capacity, and on his private virtues. This gentleman does not seem to entertain any idea of returning to his native land, but appears inclined to spend the residue of his days, within the limits of a province, which he has so long governed with honour to himself, satisfaction to the people, and fidelity to his sovereign.

Lord Baltimore wrote to Sharpe in reference to Whitehall:

Captain Love having hinted to me of your desire of some English Hares he informs me you have a villa and grounds to keep them in. It gives me pleasure your being in such a situation, the recess of Happiness. I have ordered Hares to be got at Woodcote. The Steward has ketched four Brace. I shall have them augmented to more if I can and send them by Captain Love.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

As to the hares, Sharpe wrote some months afterwards:

I am very much obliged to you for the Present of English hares and Dogs you were so kind as to send me by Captain Love, who I daresay took all possible care of them. Unluckily all the Hares, except a Leash, died at sea, and one of them, also, the day after they were brought hither. I am much afraid the surviving Brace which I have turned out at my farm are infected with the same disorder.

Governor Horatio Sharpe, of Maryland, whose sixteen years of office covered that eventful period when independence was brewing, was born in Yorkshire, in 1718, one of a numerous and celebrated family. His eldest brother, John, who died while he was in Maryland, was one of the guardians of Frederick, Sixth Lord Baltimore. Another brother, Gregory, was a distinguished Oriental scholar, Master of the Temple and chaplain to Frederick, Prince of Wales, and is spoken of by Boswell in his Life of Johnson in the following words:

He, Johnson, went with me one Sunday to hear my old master Gregory Sharpe preach at the Temple. In the prefatory prayer Sharpe ranted about liberty, as a blessing most fervently to be implored and its continuance prayed for. Johnson observed that our liberty was in no sort of danger; he would have done much better to pray against our licentiousness.

It was through Gregory Sharpe's influence that Horatio Sharpe received his appointment as proprietary governor of Maryland. Prior to this time, he had served against the French as captain in Brigadier-General Powlett's regiment of marines, and as lieutenant-colonel of foot in the West Indies. In 1753, he arrived in Annapolis, as duly chronicled by that leisurely custodian of news, the Maryland Gazette, of Annapolis, and took up his duties in energetic fashion.

Some historians have credited Governor Sharpe with first suggesting the famous Stamp Act, which led to the separation of the colonies from the mother country. In a communication of 1754 to Lord Baltimore, in England, in commenting on the difficulty of raising money from the colonial assemblies to carry on war against the French and Indians, he suggests that this end be brought about by "imposing an equal poll Tax, or by a Duty on the importation of Spirituous Liquors and Wines, or an excise on such as may be either imported or made on the Continent, or by a Stamp Duty or something similar on Deeds and Writings. . . . It would, I conceive, be proper for the Law to order the Enrollment of all Deeds of Bargain and Sale and to invalidate all Deeds of Trust, unless they be also properly stamped and enrolled, as well as Deeds of Sale in the Provincial, or county clerk's office, where, I apprehend, the Stamp or Seal might be lodged." This outlines concisely the first Stamp Act of 1768, whose repeal and subsequent re-enactment in modified form set the colonies ablaze. In 1768, Sharpe was replaced by Sir Robert Eden, who had married the proprietary's sister. He now took up his residence permanently at Whitehall, which had hitherto been only his country home, and from then until 1773 devoted himself to planting, gardening, and living the life of a simple country gentleman. In this year he returned to England, where he died in 1790, leaving Whitehall to his old associate and faithful friend, John Ridout, Annapolis, who married Mary Ogle.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The grant of land on which Whitehall was built was purchased by Nicholas Greenberry, of Annapolis, in 1680, from William Fuller, of Virginia, son of Capt. William Fuller, its first surveyor. At his death in 1697, Greenberry left it to Charles, his son, who died in 1718, leaving Whitehall to his wife during her lifetime, to descend at her death to Saint Margaret's parish for the support of a minister. Mrs. Greenberry, the widow, married Col. Charles Hammond, Treasurer of the Western Shore. She died, records the Maryland Gazette, "Saturday night, February 25, 1769." Prior to her death, however, and that of her husband, who survived her three years, the tract of land had been purchased by Governor Sharpe, who secured a special act of legislature to set aside the provisions of Mr. Greenberry's will.

After the death of its second owner, John Ridout,

---

WHITEHALL

---

the old mansion passed to his son, Horatio, who married Rachel Goldsborough, of Cambridge, Maryland, and from Horatio to Horatio's son, John.

John Ridout, son of Horatio, had the following children: Horatio, Samuel, Eliza, Rachel, and Ann Ogle.

Whitehall remained in the hands of this branch of the Ridout family until 1895, when it was purchased by Mrs. W. G. Story, of Washington City, wife of Gen. W. G. Story, U. S. A.

In the graveyard at Whitehall, lie generations of the Ridouts and their connections. Among the names to be found there are those of: John Ridout, of Horatio, 1793-1868; Weems Ridout, 1818-1881; Mary Ridout Winchester, 1812-1894; Prudence O. Ridout, 1834-1909; Horatio S. Ridout, 1822-1851; Samuel Ridout, 1824-1856; Meliora Ogle Ridout, 1858-1907; Hester Ann Chase Ridout, 1817-1888.

The servants' burying ground is not far from the master's graveyard and is situated at the base of a great linden tree which was standing, no doubt, before the old mansion was built.

---

MONTPELIER

LAUREL, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

SNOWDEN—JENKINS—TAYLOR—BLAKEMAN—
PENDLETON—VON SCHRADER

---

HE traveller, one hundred years ago, on the old Annapolis-Washington post-road, would have seen a very beautiful homestead near present-day Laurel, Prince George's County, Maryland. This was Montpelier, home of Nicholas Snowden, just over the county line from Anne Arundel County to Prince George's County and about halfway between the terminal cities of this much-traversed means of communication. Certainly he might have alighted and broken his journey, for the mansion—then an "old" house, as houses are familiarly reckoned—was one of the very hospitable homes of the state, with a long tradition of good living and comfort, and had sheltered many men, famous and humble alike. George Washington had spent nights there, even before the Annapolis-Washington-post road was built, before the guest was our great, austere "Father of His Country." And to-day, the old homestead still throws out protecting arms—though not over descendants of those who called it into being—as hospitable and as fine as when it was built. Beautifully preserved against the attacks of time, and finely maintained by its present owners, it is a splendid memorial of the days of the proprietary in Maryland.

---

MONTPELIER

---

The old post-road still stretches over hill and through the reedy marshes of the Patuxent Valley in which Montpelier is situated but, except for occasional stretches, it is not kept up and is but rarely travelled. About three or four miles farther along its course, you come to the site of Birmingham, another (and the original) Snowden stronghold in this part of Maryland which, after standing two hundred years, was burned (by a vandal's act, it is thought) in 1891.

Montpelier is situated on a hill-top and originally overlooked thousands of acres of its owner's land. Though the present estate does not go into great figures it is yet comfortably large. The house is of the familiar Maryland Georgian type of central building with wings; but it differs from others of its kind in two peculiar features—the roof line and the shape of the wings. The former is pointed, the lines of the roofs of wings and central building converging to a single upper focal point. While this sounds rather extravagant, the effect is very attractive. The wings themselves are semi-octagonal in shape, with the half octagon to the front, this and the Hammond House in Annapolis being the only colonial mansions in Maryland having such a distinction.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

In front, and to the south side of the house, is the garden, one of the place's great charms nowadays. It has been splendidly kept up and the old English box has reached a gigantic height, forming long, shady lanes cool even in the hottest summer day. The major part of it is laid out in the form of a cross with circles on the arms. The trunk of the cross is a walk leading to the front door, where there is a large porch extremely comfortable, though, undoubtedly, the addition of recent years. The garden contains a very quaint summer-house where, tradition asserts, Major Herbert courted his bride, one of the Snowden daughters, and which might very well have been the setting for many sentimental interludes.

The back of the house has a great deal of charm, chiefly because of the beautiful doorway which graces the central portion of its expanse. The door now bears a von Schrader coat-of-arms and knocker in place of the old knocker it bore in early days, but in all other aspects the back of the house is much as it must have been a hundred years ago. Ivy frames the windows and was so thick when its present owners acquired the property that, literally, cart-loads of it were cut off and carried away. At the corner of the right wing of the house, is a great bell on a high post, used in old days to call the field hands up to the great house when the master wished to speak to them. A circular driveway completes the picture.

REAR VIEW, MONTEPELIER
c 1740

---

MONTPELIER

---

Interiorly is found a very elaborately carved mantel in the dining-room, beautiful panelling in the sitting-room, a simple and elegant mantel in the parlour, many cupboards let into the walls at odd places, including a fine china cupboard, and huge wrought-brass door hinges and latches,—the only existing instance of the use of wrought-brass for these purposes in colonial Maryland. The arrangement of the rooms is simple—a broad hall from front to back of the building, the stairs set off from the middle of the hall and running with it, and the rooms symmetrically disposed on either side. Words fail to describe, however, the brightness and cheeriness of the whole interior of the old mansion, especially of the hall on a summer's day with both big doors open, the wind sweeping through and a view here, of the quaint old garden, and, there, of the gravelled driveway, the ancient dignified trees and the blue distance of hills beyond. One of the great charms of Montpelier is its trees, as it is blessed with an abundance of magnificent old oaks.

The foundations of the mansion were laid somewhere between 1740 and 1770 by Thomas Snowden, son of Richard (the "iron-master," as he styles himself in his will), son of Richard, son of Richard the Immigrant. We cannot be sure of a more definite date because the first formal division of the Snowden lands in Prince George's County was not made until 1790, when a deed of partition inter partibus was recorded, and so there are no records. This seems a curious circumstance from several standpoints; for one thing, it points to the fact that the family, which had been seated in this country for over a hundred years, lived in entire amity up to this time without recourse to law or courts for disposition of its affairs. Perhaps the fact that, up to a late date, the Snowdens were Quakers may explain the quiet conduct of their affairs over their own hearth-stones.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Montpelier was built by the aforesaid Thomas, born 1722, died 1770, and was greatly added to by his son, Major Thomas, of the Maryland line. The elder Thomas, tradition tells us, was sober, simple in tastes and something of a recluse, while the son was more fond of the bright things of the world. Thomas, the elder, built the substantial central portion of Montpelier. Thomas, the younger, added the beautiful wings and the interior decoration of the whole.

This Thomas Snowden, the younger—better known as “Major” Thomas, from his services during the Revolution—was born in 1751, at Montpelier, and died in 1803. He married Ann Ridgely, a great heiress, and after his wedding was so plentifully supplied with this world’s goods that the members of the Quaker congregation of which he was a part, forbade him to come to meeting. To placate them, he liberated one hundred negro slaves and was then allowed to worship with his brethren. Says Lawrence Buckler Thomas, the faithful chronicler of the Thomas family and its connections, of Major Thomas Snowden:

---

MONTPELIER

---

He lived at Montpelier which was on the great Northern and Southern Post-road, and entertained great numbers of people who were then continually passing upon it, and in accordance with the hospitable customs of the day, would not hesitate to stop at his residence for the night. Washington, himself, once spent the night there, and the bed in which he slept is still preserved.

Ann Ridgely Snowden, the devoted wife of Major Thomas Snowden, died thirty-one years after her husband, on Good Friday of 1834, having had issue: Richard, who married Eliza Warfield; Thomas, a bachelor; Mary, who married Col. John Carlyle Herbert, of Walnut Grange, Virginia, and whose great-granddaughter, Mrs. Carlyle Herbert Hooff, lives at Oaklands; Nicholas, who married Elizabeth Warfield Thomas, and inherited Montpelier; and Caroline, who died unmarried.

Nicholas, the next owner of the old home, was born at Montpelier, October 21, 1786, and died March 8, 1831. His wife, Elizabeth Warfield Thomas—to whom he was married October 7, 1806—died at Avondale, Maryland, June 16, 1866. He left the following children: Ann Elizabeth, who married, first, Francis M. Hall, second, Charles Hill; Louisa, who married Col. Horace Capron, and made her home in Chicago; Julianna Maria, who married Dr. Theodore Jenkins, of Baltimore, and inherited the homestead; Adeline, who married Walter W. W. Bowie; Edward, who married Mary Thomas Warfield; Dr. De Wilton, who married Emma C. Capron; Henry, who married Mary Cournan; Elizabeth, who entered a convent in Georgetown, D. C.; and Emily Roseville, who married Charles C. Hill. Descendant sons and daughters of these unions have taken prominent places in many states.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Ann Elizabeth Snowden's second husband, Charles Hill, was the father of Charles C. Hill, who married her sister, Emily Roseville Snowden, and she did not marry the second time until after her second husband's son had married her sister. What relation were her children by her second marriage to her sister's children? Her husband's children were younger than his grandchildren, it is plain; and other aspects of this interesting genealogical problem will be discovered upon reflection.

Julianna Snowden, who married Dr. Theodore Jenkins, was the inheritor of Montpelier, and was a woman of fine intellectual endowment and great strength of purpose. She was married at Montpelier, June 23, 1835, and after her husband's death at the homestead, December 15, 1866, managed the entire large estate. Her children were: Theodore, born April 19, 1838, killed at the battle of Cedar Mountains, Virginia, August 9, 1862; Elizabeth Snowden, Louis William, born June 16, 1842; Francis Xavier, born September 29, 1844, and lives in Baltimore; Mary

SUMMER HOUSE, MONTPELIER

GARDEN, MONTPELIER

---

MONTPELIER

---

Eliza, born November 5, 1846, and lives in Washington, D. C.; Ann Louisa, and Arthur.

Since the death of Mrs. Jenkins, the beautiful property has passed through many hands. It was left by her will to her children and was, later, in the possession of W. P. Davis and Martin W. Chollar as speculative investors until, in 1895, it was purchased by Mrs. Josephine D. Taylor, of New York, for a summer home. In 1900, Lewis H. Blakeman, of New York, acquired the title, from whom in 1906, it went to Edmund H. Pendleton, a writer, of New York, who lived there until his death in 1910. In 1911 it was purchased from the Pendleton estate by Otto V. von Schrader, of St. Louis, its present owner, whose family consists of his wife, a married son, Atreus Hargadine von Schrader, and a grandson, Atreus Hargadine, Jr.

In its present hands the old homestead belongs to those capable of understanding its traditions and of continuing them.

---

OAKLANDS

(WITH NOTES ON OTHER SNOWDEN HOMES)

CONTEE STATION, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

SNOWDEN—CONTEE—BOLLING—HOOFF

---

N the crest of a hill overlooking Contee, Prince George's County, Maryland, stands Oaklands, one of the Snowden homes, now the property of Mr. Charles R. Hooft, a Virginian by birth, whose wife—a daughter of the late Gen. James R. Herbert, C. S. A.—is a descendant of the family which called the solid old homestead into being; though, when Mr. Hooft acquired its title, in 1911, it had passed from the direct line of its founders.

The house is a sturdy brick structure distinguished on the exterior by fine front and back doorways and by the excellence of its brickwork, whose customary monotony is varied by the use of heavy, glazed "headers," the secret of the making of which is believed to have passed away. In the rear of the house, which faces west, is a charming, crumbling garden with broken terraces, whence may be had a delightful view of the tree-clad hills from which the estate took its name. The place had gone through various stages of ruin before Mr. Hooft took it in hand, even to having its window weights and the top-soil of the garden sold. For the rehabilitation of the home Mr. Hooft has made, and is carrying out, extensive plans, all of them based primarily on the desire to have it, when these are finished, as near as possible as it was when it was new.

---

OAKLANDS

---

The arrangement of the house on the inside is simple: a broad hallway from front to back divides it in the middle and there is a small wing to the south in which there are kitchen, pantry and servants' rooms. An exceedingly sunny and beautiful staircase leads from the hall at the rear, extending half the width of the house. Its entrance and its point of departure from the hall are marked by two graceful, classic arches placed on the transverse and longitudinal lines of the house, respectively. The stair is broken by a landing on which stands a Fairfax clock, a relic of the famous Lord Fairfax, of Virginia, Washington's patron, and one of Mrs. Hooff's maternal forebears. The rooms are notable for their high ceilings and good proportion, the parlour, in especial, being very charming with high-wainscoted walls, and simple cornice. In the dining-room, is a corner cupboard, which takes every feminine heart, and in the sitting-room adjoining are the remains of a secret staircase which led from this room to the master's bedroom above.

In the old days, this sitting-room was used as a card-room and the following story is told of it: It seems that at one period the Lord of Misrule held sway in this house—as he has in almost every old home in Maryland—and during his reign, one evening, a furious and boisterous game of cards was in progress in this room. High stakes were on, the players were all heated and red with wine when suddenly one of them was summoned away by a message that could not be put aside. His going would mean the breaking up of the game.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

"We would play with the Devil if he took your place," declared the host and his guests with loud oaths.

They were seated in confusion when there came a knock at the door. Entered a tall, slim man whom no one there recognized.

"May I take the vacant place?" he asked.

"Sit down," replied the host, "though we don't know your name."

Again play waxed furious. The stranger played in an incredible streak of luck. Morning came and went and afternoon and evening and still the game went on, each player seeming to be bound to his seat by some irresistible force. At last the unknown had won every dollar of each man sitting at the table and the hypothecation of every valuable they possessed. He arose to go but turned at the door to bow farewell. Sharpened by distress, the weary eyes of the men at the table noted plainly the outline of a forked tail beneath the back of his coat as he bent over, and, on his departure, a smell of brimstone clung about the room for a long time.

In each of the rooms of the house, is a broad fireplace set across the corner of the room farthest from the door. This gives an exceedingly homelike atmosphere

CHINA CUPBOARD

STAIRWAY

OAKLANDS

---

OAKLANDS

---

to the house in winter, and, indeed, one of its great distinctions at all seasons is its general air of sunny good cheer. The windows are full five panes across and high in proportion.

Oaklands was inherited by Richard Snowden from his father, Major Thomas Snowden, of Montpelier, which is situated nearby, and to it he took his bride, Eliza Warfield, of Bushby Park, Howard County, when he was married, February 13, 1798. After the death of his first wife, he married her sister, Louisa Victoria Warfield, of Bushby Park—no mean tribute from a man to his wife's family.

The estate extended from the boundaries of Montpelier, on the south, well up into the present Howard County, Maryland, and embraced more than two thousand acres. Its master had no children by his second marriage. The issue of the first has begotten a large and active connection. Ann Louisa, the eldest child, who inherited the homestead, married Capt. John Contee; Col. Thomas Snowden, the eldest son, married Ann Rebecca Nicholls and had Sara Rebecca Nicholls, who married Capt. Charles Marshall of Baltimore; Caroline Eliza married Albert Fairfax, of Northampton, Prince George's County, Maryland, father of the late John Contee Fairfax, first of the name after the Revolution to assume the title of Lord Fairfax—the only certified English title in the United States—and grandfather of Albert, present Lord Fairfax; Emily

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Roseville married Col. Timothy P. Andrews, U. S. A., of Baltimore; and Richard Nicholls married Elizabeth Ridgely Warfield.

The children of Ann Louisa Contee, inheritor of the homestead, included eight daughters and two sons: Charles Snowden Contee, who married Betty Bolling; and Richard, who married Anna Bolling, Betty's sister. These sons were the last of the family in a direct line from the builder to occupy the home. In 1878 the place was bought by trustees of the Bolling estate and at the death of Richard Contee's wife, six years ago, it was sold to John Dominick Bolling, nephew of the Bolling sisters. In 1912, it was purchased by Mr. Hooff.

Concerning the origin of the Snowden family in Maryland, we may read to advantage Lawrence Buckler Thomas' notes on the Thomas family:

Richard Snowden, of Wales, who is said to have held a Major's commission under Oliver Cromwell, came to Maryland in the seventeenth century. His son, Richard, is mentioned as a well-known owner of land in Maryland, near South River, in a deed dated October 13, 1679. August 1, 1686, a tract of land called "Robin Hood's Forest," and containing 10,500 acres, was granted to him. He was living October 13, 1688, when William Parker deeds to him certain land for a consideration of 306 pounds. In 1704, he was still living but died soon after that date.

Richard Snowden, son of this Richard, married Mary Waters—of the family of which Dr. Franklin Waters and his sisters, of West River, Maryland, are descendants—and became a large land-holder and iron-founder, adding more than ten thousand acres to the large tract of land already his by virtue of inheritance from his father. In partnership with Edmund Jennings, of Annapolis, John Galloway and Jacob Cowman, of Anne Arundel County, and John Pritchard, of London, he built in Prince George's County, on the Patuxent, the first ironworks ever operated in Maryland. Not far from his forges on the Patuxent and near the present-day city of Laurel, Maryland, he erected his manor-house Birmingham, which stood in fine preservation until 1890, a superb example of early building, when it was destroyed by fire.

---

OAKLANDS

---

Richard Snowden, the third, son of Richard, the second, married first, in 1709, Eliza, daughter of William and Eliza Coale, and four years after her death, in 1713, married, second, Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel and Mary Hutchins Thomas. He lived at Birmingham and, following the lines his father had laid down, became one of the most influential and affluent men of his generation. At his death, 1763, he was sole owner of the ironworks his father established and was building a new forge not far from the old one on the Patuxent.

Mr. Julius Snowden, a direct descendant of this Richard, who lives in a home he has built on the site of old Birmingham, found a chimney-back near the river on the site of one of these foundries which is a very curious object. It bears the date 1738 in old-fashioned numerals and, in script equally quaint, on a line below, the word "Potuxon." Beneath this line is a third bearing a capital "O" intertwined with a heart, though just what this means no one has been able to assert; possibly a trade-mark used by the builder of the foundries.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The children of Richard Snowden, the third, by his first wife were: Deborah, who married James Brooke, of Sandy Spring, Maryland—ancestor of Dr. James Brooke, of Sandy Spring; Eliza, who married John Thomas; and Mary, who married Samuel Thomas. By his second wife, his children were: Richard Thomas, who married Mary Wright and was the father of Major Thomas Snowden, of Montpelier, and grandfather of Richard Snowden of Oaklands; Ann, who married Henry Wright Crabbe; Margaret; Samuel, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Philip and Ann Chew Thomas, and who built the quaint old homestead now occupied by Mr. Jeremiah McCawley and wife; Elizabeth, who married Joseph Cowman, descendants of whom are in Baltimore; and John, who inherited Birmingham.

John Snowden was the youngest child and seems to have been his parents' favorite, for in his father's will, drawn shortly before his death in 1768, it was specified that he should stay at home so as to keep his mother company and that if he should marry and wish to have a home of his own, he should be given land near the manor-house, which at his mother's death he was to inherit, and to be allowed to erect a small house at the expense of the estate. He did build for himself before his mother's death, though he did not marry until late in life, and the little frame building which he caused to be put up—built in the substantial fashion of even the smallest homes of that day—is still standing near the site of Birmingham after that stately pile has been vanquished by the elements. He did not marry until forty years old, and this fact, coupled with his being the youngest of a large family, makes his descendants almost two generations nearer the founder of the family than descendants of any other branch. He married Rachel, daughter of Gerard and Mary Hall Hopkins, and had seven children, only two of whom had issue. These were Rachel, who married Judge John S. Tyson; and Rezin Hammond Snowden, the youngest son, born in 1796, who inherited Birmingham, and married, in 1829, Margaret, daughter of John McFadon, a rich merchant of Baltimore, who left an estate largely invested in Baltimore city property.

---

OAKLANDS

---

Rezin Hammond Snowden, who lived at Birmingham, died in 1858, leaving seven children, of whom Maria Louise, born in 1843, married Professor Alfred M. Mayer, the distinguished scientist and has children living in Brooklyn, New York; John, the eldest son, married Sarah E. Hopkins, and had a son John who lives at Snowden Hall, near Laurel, Maryland, and a daughter, Mrs. Charles H. Stanley of Laurel; William, inheritor of Birmingham, married Adelaide, daughter of Dr. Gustavus Warfield, of Howard County, Maryland.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Birmingham never went out of the line of the family. Julius, son of William, and inheritor of the estate, has built on the site of the old manor-house and lives in this new home with his family which consists of his wife (who was Miss Estell Bird) and her sister, Miss Anna C. Bird.

To retrace a few steps in Snowden genealogy, Thomas Snowden, of Montpelier, father of Major Thomas, and son of Richard, the third of the name, had a son Richard who built Fairlands, the last of the old Snowden homes that we shall record, now occupied by Dr. Leonard Robert Coates, originally of Coatesville, Pennsylvania, and of the family which gave that place its name, who married Miss Boarman, daughter of the previous owner. He has three children: Roberta, who, in 1910, married W. W. Easterday, of Washington, D. C.; Robert Boarman and Dorothy Wetherill, aged sixteen. The builder of Fairlands died shortly after his marriage and was soon followed to the grave by his wife, who was Elizabeth Rutland. Their orphan daughter, Mary, was brought up at her uncle's home, Montpelier, and because of the large estate in her own right was considered a great catch in marriage. She married John Chew Thomas, of Leiperville, Pennsylvania, brother of Evan William Thomas, the then owner of Whitby Hall, Philadelphia.

---

BURLEIGH

HOWARD COUNTY, MARYLAND

HAMMOND

---

BURLEIGH, the old Hammond place in Howard County, Maryland, is not far from Doughoregan Manor, which it surpasses in grace and beauty of interior decoration, but to which it is much inferior in size and venerability of aspect. It is situated about five miles from Ellicott City, the thriving little county-seat of Howard County, and is approached by the famous old national highway, Frederick Pike, once the national highway. The estate of which it is the seat comprises one thousand acres of fine, fertile farming land in this most productive of Maryland's counties, and the entire property is now the home of Mrs. Mary Hanson Hammond, widow of the late Col. Matthias Hammond, a lineal descendant of the founder, and her daughter, Mrs. Richard Craigh Hammond.

The approach to the house is through a tree-lined avenue which ends in a circle before the front door, and a white bar fence encircles the home lot. The house, itself, consists of a square central building with one wing. The entrance is distinguished with a porch and the doorway is very exquisitely carved. A broad hallway leads from front to rear of the house, and the staircase begins its ascent at the back of the hall.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

One of the great beauties of the house is the garden doorway at the end of the main hall. It is an arched doorway with a fanlight over the central portion and the two long narrow windows which flank this part. The structural wooden details are beautifully carved in the decorative design which is carried out through the house.

The beauty of the interior carving of Burleigh attracts many visitors, and it is of unusual character in the originality of the design and in the great delicacy and precision of workmanship manifested in its execution. On mantels, doorways and every available space for decoration this lace-work of cut wood extends.

The garden of Burleigh is not so beautiful now as it was during its late master's lifetime or during the lives of those who lived in the old home before him, as the widowed ladies who now form the household are not so well able to have these details looked after but it is still a very delightful place, especially when a westerly sun throws long shadows through its walks and touches the delicate carving of the old garden doorway with mellow, warm splotches of golden light.

A feature of the grounds of Burleigh which lends much to its romantic atmosphere is the old slaves' quarters a little distance from the house. Great beetle-

BURLEIGH
c. 1760

---

BURLEIGH

---

backed barns and stone buildings make up the out-buildings of the homestead.

Burleigh was built by Col. Rezin Hammond, a revolutionary character—one of the Committee of Safety of Annapolis in pre-revolutionary days—for his nephew, Denton Hammond, son of “Brother Philip.” It is said that this Rezin Hammond observed his brother’s large family and told him not to worry about the future of at least one of his sons—that he, Rezin, would provide for him; and, being a bachelor and very well endowed with this world’s goods, too, there is no doubt that he could afford to do so. Denton was the son who was the recipient of his favors. The estate thus created has not been divided since it became Denton’s home.

The family with which this old place is associated has left its imprint in many parts of Maryland and springs from Maj.-Gen. John Hammond, a Royalist commander, who died in Annapolis in 1707. He was a great-nephew of Henry Hammond, D.D., chaplain to Charles I, of England, and great-grandson of John Hammond, M.D., physician to James I. At his death he left a sum of money to St. Ann’s Church, Annapolis, and this sum was used to purchase a big, brass-bound Bible which is one of the cherished relics of that church to-day. His tombstone lies in St. Ann’s churchyard, though his body was laid to rest on his estate north of Annapolis beside the waters of the Severn. Mr. John

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Wesley Brown, of Howard County and Baltimore, a son of Mrs. Matilda Ridgely Hammond Brown, has in his possession a tankard which belonged to Maj.-Gen. John Hammond, his ancestor, and, in addition, a brass-bound book of sermons by Reverend Henry Hammond, chaplain to Charles I, which belonged to Maj.-Gen. John.

The children of Maj.-Gen. John Hammond were four—Thomas, John, William, Charles—forming an extensive line of descent. Charles married his cousin, Hannah Howard, and had five sons—Charles, Philip, John, Rezin, and Nathaniel,—and three daughters, Hammutell, Ruth and Hannah. He died in 1713. Philip, of Charles, married Rachel Brice and died in 1760. Charles, of Philip and Rachel Brice, died in 1777, one of the largest owners of land in Maryland, holding large tracts in Anne Arundel, Frederick and the present Howard County. His son, Colonel Rezin, we have already become acquainted with.

Philip Hammond, father of Denton Hammond, beneficiary of his uncle Col. Rezin Hammond, married Elizabeth Wright, daughter of Thomas and Mary Wright, and died in 1822, leaving seventeen children, including this Denton.

Denton Hammond married Sarah Hall Baldwin, daughter of Capt. Henry Baldwin, of Anne Arundel County, and Sarah Hall, his wife, and had three children who grew up at Burleigh and made its halls ring

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO BURLEIGH

---

BURLEIGH

---

with their shouts and laughter. Elizabeth, one of these children, married Richard Cromwell, and settled near Burleigh. Camilla, the other daughter, married Dr. Thomas Herbert, and became the mother of the late Gen. James G. Herbert, C. S. A., a man distinguished in many ways in his day, and whose daughter, Mrs. Carlyle Herbert Hooff, is the present-day mistress of Oaklands, another old homestead of Maryland. Col. Matthias Hammond was the third of these children and the last male occupant of Burleigh, of the name. He married Mary Hanson, of Anne Arundel County, and had one child, a daughter, who married her cousin, Richard Craigh Hammond, whom she survives.

There have been many brilliant entertainments at Burleigh, and its tradition of fine hospitality was well maintained by its last master, Col. Matthias Hammond. He was a man of great scholarship, a fluent writer, and a linguist of distinction. Yet he did not occupy himself entirely with his books but found distraction in the society of his fellows, and was host to many a gay and congenial gathering of neighbors and friends.

In Burleigh is a great quantity of rare and beautiful old furniture and china, as well as the extensive library with which Col. Matthias Hammond busied himself, and a visit to it now in its quiet elder days is a delightful excursion into the atmosphere of leisure and dignity which seemed to be a peculiar possession of the generation that passed a hundred years ago.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

HOWARD COUNTY, MARYLAND

(CARROLL MANSION, ANNAPOLIS; HOMEWOOD, BROOKLANDWOOD; CARROLL PARK HOUSE, BALTIMORE)

CARROLL

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR, the centre of the historic estate from which it takes its name, is the strongest link in the chain which binds Maryland to its colonial past. The home of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the longest-lived of the signers of the Declaration, and of many figures notable in the history of the nation and the state, it has for two centuries and more been the seat of one of the most distinguished families in the history of Maryland.

The magnificent old mansion is situated five miles northwest of Ellicott City, Maryland, on the Frederick pike, once the national highway from east to west, and over which many a settler following the counsel epitomized by Greeley has slowly made his way. The house is situated on the crest of a high ridge of ground commanding a broad prospect to the east, at the end of a mile long driveway through a beautiful wood from the pike and is surrounded by five thousand acres of fertile land, the present-day extent of the estate.

As the visitor to Doughoregan approaches the house, after a cool drive through its magnificent woods,

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

he is at once impressed with the size of the old mansion and the overpowering dignity of the whole scene of which it is a centre. The house is a long, low structure with two wings and a cupola in the middle and looks more like a section of some ancient wall with watchman's tower than like a dwelling house. It is three hundred feet in length and not more than thirty feet deep. The right or north wing is the chapel where every Sunday the devout have held services for more than a hundred years; the left or south wing contains the kitchen and servants' rooms. The house is divided through the middle by a broad hallway very heavily and plainly panelled in oak. To the right of this, as you enter, is a parlor beyond which is a study, the walls of which are covered with family portraits, and in which the signer conducted the business of his vast estate. Among the paintings here is one showing the signer as a boy at school in France, standing upon a shore watching a distant ship make out to a distant sea. Other portraits show the late Governor John Lee Carroll and the beautiful three Caton sisters, granddaughters of the signer, who were known as the Three Graces of America. To the left of the hallway, as you enter from the front, are a reception- and a dining-room. Adjoining the reception-room is a very charming little breakfast-room. In the dining-room may be seen the old Carroll silver and a rich hoard of old furniture. One of the features of interest of the interior of the house is the Cardinal's room, a richly furnished apartment in which the predominant colors in the scheme of decoration are red and gold, and which is scrupulously reserved for the use of Cardinal Gibbons, or whatever other high dignitary of the Roman church may be entertained at Doughoregan. The Carrolls have been churchmen for, lo, these many years!

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Passing through the house to the garden in the rear one finds one's self at the first of a very beautiful succession of terraces leading from the mansion to the magnificent grove of old trees that protects the place to the west. The southern boundary of the garden is a charmingly irregular and moss-grown stone wall that has been standing for a century. The garden itself, laid out when the house was new and tended carefully from that time to this, is an ideally beautiful spot.

The finely planned driveway which leads from the Frederick pike at the entrance of the estate to the house was planned by the late Royal Phelps, Esquire, of New York, whose daughter was the mistress of the old place, and while thus only a comparatively new addition to the estate, as its age is to be measured, is one of its greatest attractions. It is over a mile long and leads by a gentle ascent from the gate to the house through long curves well calculated to show in vistas the wonderful old trees of the place.

Doughoregan Manor has always been noted for its hospitality and a delightful picture of one occasion of its generous outpouring has been drawn by J. D. Warfield, who wrote of the "Founders of Anne Arundel and Howard Counties," of Maryland.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

I have a distinct and delightful recollection of a visit to Doughoregan Manor in my boyhood with my father who was an invited guest of Col. Charles Carroll. The occasion was a tournament which, as far as my knowledge of tilting extends, was unique. The gentry of the neighbouring counties with their families were present, and the display of beauty and fashion was such as made a lasting impression on a youth of ten years. The joust was out of the ordinary way of such entertainments. Instead of the conventional ring suspended in the air, through which the knights at full gallop were to thrust the spear, the object of their skill was a lay figure of wood representing a man life-size, caparisoned as a knight, and so nicely balanced on a pedestal that a blow in the face from a well-poised spear would unhorse the figure while a stroke against the body was calculated to shiver the spear or unhorse the knight.

Against this figure each knight, handsomely attired and mounted with heavy spears about twelve feet long and one to three inches thick with a strong brass point, was to dash himself at full speed. One knight was dismounted and another had his spear shivered but no injury occurred to man or horse. The victor who overthrew the lay figure three times and so won the right to crown the queen of honour was an officer of the United States Cavalry; but his name, with that of the queen, I have forgotten. After the joust followed the crowning of the queen and then the "menu" and the departure of the many guests.

The Carroll family has, it may be easily argued, been the greatest land-owning family in America. When Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the signer, died in 1832, he owned 27,691 acres in Bradford County, Pennsylvania, in addition to the 80,000 acres or more he possessed in his own state, and his family, before him, held continually the ideal of the acquisition of landed property. In 1707, Charles Carroll, the first of the name in Maryland, grandfather of the signer, held Clynmalyra, a tract of land of 5,000 acres; Enfield Chase, a royal stretch in Prince George's County, Maryland; 1,969 acres in Baltimore County, including Ely O'Carroll and Litterlouna, the old dwelling-house on which burned down in 1913, and other tracts in Maryland aggregating in all nearly 60,000 acres. In this same year he was granted the princely domain of 10,000 acres known as Doughoregan, and ten thousand more acres were added to this in the later grant of land of Carrollton Manor. Charles Carroll, it seems, was given the right to choose ten thousand acres in Frederick County and first fixed on a spot beyond Frederick town but, later, finding the land better on the south side of Frederick, changed to a location in the present Howard County. The record of the property was not made until 1723, if we can believe Charles Browning's "Chief Explanation," published in 1821:

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The grant of this land first appears to have been made April 10, 1723, to the Carroll family, some of whom dying there were different assignments from time to time up to 1734, but I understand the land was not taken up till just before the Revolution by the present Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, for his father, and

DOUGHOREGAN FROM THE REAR

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

the only money that appears to have been given for the land was a rent of $20 per annum which the present Mr. Carroll got rid of by the act for the abolition of quit-rent, 1780.

Portions of Carrollton became the inheritances of the girls of the family in later generations born in the old manor-house of Doughoregan.

Charles Carroll, the first of the Carrolls, of Carrollton, in Maryland, was a claimant to the estates of the O'Carrolls, princes of Ely in Kings and Tipperary Counties, Ireland, and petitioned the throne of England to restore him to his inheritance. While he was successful in gaining the ear of the king, he could not gain his petition but was offered instead 60,000 acres in Maryland.

We first hear of him in Maryland in 1688, and the following year saw the overthrow of the proprietary government in Maryland. When Sir Lionel Copley, later, took possession of the affairs of the province in the name of King Charles II, he charged Carroll, who had been Lord Baltimore's attorney-general, with disloyalty and threw him into prison. In 1715, with the restoration of the Protestant Charles Calvert, Carroll was liberated and appointed Judge and Register of the Land Office, the highest office in the disposition of the proprietary, succeeding his father-in-law, Henry Darnall.

Like most Catholic gentlemen of his time, Charles Carroll was educated at Douai, France. He married, first, in America, Martha Underwood, daughter of Anthony Underwood, of St. Mary's County, but this first marriage left him soon a widower, as his wife died in 1690. In 1693 he married Mary Darnall, daughter of Henry Darnall, of Portland Manor, whose wife was Elinor Hatton, widow of Major Thomas Brooke, of Brookefield. Of their ten children, three sons and two daughters lived to maturity. Henry, the eldest son, was drowned at sea while returning from school at St. Omer, France, which left Charles, born 1702, the heir-at-law. Daniel Carroll, born 1707, married Ann Rozier, of Notley Hall, and became the progenitor of the Carrolls of Duddington, Prince George's County, now a part of Washington City.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

When the second Lord Baltimore died, Charles Carroll, who was in England, became the attorney of the widowed Lady Baltimore. In 1718 he returned to the colonies, where he died in 1720. His will made his three sons, Henry (then living), Charles and Daniel, his executors. In 1729 Charles and Daniel Carroll sold sixty acres of land on which the city of Baltimore was laid out.

Charles Carroll, the Second, was known as Charles Carroll, of Annapolis, to distinguish him from his father. He it was who erected the Carroll mansion in Annapolis, now the home of the Redemptorist Order, on two lots of ground purchased from a widow, to whom tradition asserts Carroll paid many times the lots' value.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

The house is a solid brick structure, four stories high on the water side, and has a magnificent view of Spa Creek, which it overlooks. The garden, a famous part of the estate, lies between the house and the water. Here, Washington's diary frequently records, the Father of His Country took many a meal beneath the shade of a gigantic old tree in the cool of the evening, and this tree is still standing. In 1783, upon the occasion of Washington's resigning in Annapolis his commission as commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States, Mr. Carroll gave a great public dinner and dance in his garden, which the conservative newspapers of that day and place spoke of with unwonted enthusiasm, and of which tradition in Annapolis is still noisy.

The house is severely plain inside but very comfortable. It was used by its builder as a town house and as a centre for his active political and official life, while Doughoregan served him for a country home. In this house at Annapolis, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the signer, was born and here he wrote many of the speeches and public letters which rendered him famous in pre-revolutionary days.

In 1870, Mrs. John MacTavish, granddaughter and favourite of the signer, for whom he built the magnificent home known as Folly Quarter, deeded the property to the Redemptorist Order, to which it now belongs. The church, St. Mary's, annexed to the old

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Carroll house, was built in 1858 on land given by the Carrolls, but prior to that time the private chapel of the old home had been used by the Catholics of Annapolis as a place of worship.

Charles Carroll, the Second, had but one son, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the signer, born 1737, whose mother was Elizabeth Brooke, daughter of Clement Brooke and Jane (Sewall) Brooke, daughter of Col. Nicholas Sewall, step-son of the second Lord Baltimore. At ten years of age young Carroll was sent to school to a Jesuit college at Bohemia Manor in Cecil County, Maryland, where he was a student with his cousin, John Carroll, afterward Archbishop of Baltimore, and with Robert Brent, who married a sister of John Carroll. In 1748, with his cousin John, he was sent to St. Omers, in French Flanders, whence, in 1757, he went to the College of Louis le Grand in Paris, where he remained about four years. In 1764, Charles Carroll, of Annapolis, wrote to his son in France and gave him an estimate of his estate, which shows at the same time the vast inheritance in land which this next owner of Doughoregan might expect and, also, how comparatively little a cash revenue it brought in at that period of the nation's history.

Forty thousand acres of land, two seats alone containing each upwards of 12,000 acres, would now sell at 20 shillings sterling per acre. . . . 40,000 pounds, Sterling.

One-fifth of an Iron-work, with two forges built, a third

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

erecting, with all convenient buildings; 150 slaves; teams and carts, and 30,000 acres belonging to the works; a very growing estate, which produces to my fifth annually at least 400 pounds Sterling, at twenty-five years' purchase . . .—10,000 pounds, Sterling.

20 lots and houses in Annapolis . . . 4,000 pounds, Sterling.
285 slaves on the different plantations, at 30 pounds each . . . 8,550 pounds, Sterling.

Cattle, horses, stock of all kinds on my plantations, with working tools . . . 1,000 pounds, Sterling.

Silver household plate . . . 600 pounds, Sterling.

Debts outstanding at interest in 1762, when I balanced my books . . . 24,230 pounds, Sterling.

You must not suppose my annual income to equal the interest of the value of my estate. Many of my lands are unimproved, but I compute I have a clear revenue of at least 1,800 pounds, Sterling, per annum, and the value of my estate is continually improving.

I propose upon your coming into Maryland to convey to you my manor of Carrollton, 10,000 acres, and the addition thereto of 2,700 acres, now producing annually 250 pounds, Sterling, not one-half of which is let. Also my share of the ironworks, producing at least 400 pounds.

On my death I am willing to add my manor of Doughoregan, 10,000 acres, and also 1,425 acres called Chance adjacent thereto, on which the bulk of my negroes are settled. As you are my only child, you will, of course, have all of the residue of my estate at my death. Your return to me I hope will be in the next fall.

In 1765, young Carroll came home to his promised Doughoregan. He was married three years after his return to Mary Darnall, daughter of Henry and Rachel (Brooke) Darnall, of the same family from which his grandfather had chosen a wife. "He came home at twenty-seven years," says J. D. Warfield, the admirable historian of the Carrolls, "an amiable, upright, accomplished young man, with the polish of European society and the social requirements of studious culture. Debarred by his religion from political honors, he came to occupy in ease and comfort his manorial estates but he was not long to rest in retirement."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Throughout the course of his long and busy life, the most celebrated act that Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, performed was his signing of the Declaration of Independence, an act that, with him, as with others of the immortal signers, had an especial significance owing to the vast personal wealth which he hazarded upon the stroke of a pen.

Robert C. Winthrop, in his centennial oration at Boston, July 4, 1876, gives a version of the signing:

"Will you sign?" said Hancock to Charles Carroll. "Most willingly," was the reply. "There goes two millions with the dash of a pen," says one of those standing by; while another remarks, "Oh, Carroll, you will get off, there are so many Charles Carrolls." And then we may see him stepping back to the desk and putting that addition of "of Carrollton," to his name, which will designate him forever, and be a prouder title of nobility than those in the peerage of Great Britain, which were afterwards adorned by his accomplished and fascinating granddaughters.

This legend of Carroll's adding "of Carrollton" to his name has been repeated frequently, yet it is to be

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO DOUGHOREGAN

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

doubted that it has the significance given to it or that it has any real foundation in fact. That he did sign "Charles Carroll, of Carrollton," is not to be questioned, but that this was his ordinary mode of signature hundreds of documents in the record offices of Maryland stand to prove, and it is to be doubted whether on this one occasion he would vary his usual form and sign in instalments. In 1889 the late J. H. B. Latrobe, biographer of Carroll, wrote to J. D. Warfield, the historian:

I have no recollection of having heard the reason given in Appleton for the attaching the "of Carrollton" to the signature of Charles Carroll to the Declaration of Independence. No such reason was given me by Mr. Carroll in my conversation with him during the preparation of his biography.

Shortly after the close of the Revolution, Mr. Carroll spent more and more of his time at Doughoregan and towards the end of his life lived there continually, closing up his town house, the Carroll mansion, in Annapolis. During these years he built the chapel which forms the north wing of the manor and within the chapel he was buried after his death in 1832.

The children of Charles Carroll, the signer, and Mary Darnall, his wife, were two daughters and a son, Charles, the Fourth, who never was master of "the Manor" as Doughoregan is familiarly spoken of, as he died before his father. He married, in 1800, Harriet, daughter of Chief Justice Benjamin Chew, of Pennsylvania, who lived in the historic old colonial mansion known as Cliveden, still in possession of the family. Justice Chew's eldest daughter, who was admired by the unfortunate Major André, hero of perhaps the most deplorable incident of the Revolutionary War, married Gen. John Eager Howard, of Belvedere, now part of Baltimore city.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Harriet Chew was a great favourite of Washington, and, when the President had his portrait painted by Gilbert Stuart, often accompanied him to the sittings as Washington said her conversation "would give his face its most agreeable expression." While she was never mistress of Doughoregan her home was an even more luxurious place, though one not nearly so large,—Homewood, in the northern part of the present Baltimore city.

This beautiful old mansion, built by Charles Carroll, the signer, for his son after the latter's marriage to the charming Miss Chew, is situated on the fair stretch of land which was donated to the trustees of Johns Hopkins University as the future site of that institution of learning. In the plans drawn up by these trustees for the new home of the university, Homewood has been made the centre of the group of proposed buildings, whose designs have all been modelled on the superb original of its classic design. It is to be known as the Administration Building and is to front on a circle of driveway which leads up from Charles Street Boule-

HOMewood
1809

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

yard, the newest and most beautiful of Baltimore's residence thoroughfares.

Homewood was built in 1809, and, while erected after the inauguration of the noisy nineteenth century, is constructed in the best tradition of that type of Georgian building which distinguished the middle part of the eighteenth century. It has a central building with wings, the front portico of the central portion being distinguished by four pillars. One of the great beauties of the house is the exquisite proportion of all of its parts and the interior is elaborately ornamented with wood-carving. In the rear of the house are the remains of an old garden. A mile to the southeast of Homewood, during its first mistress's occupancy, was Homestead, the house in which Jerome Bonaparte and his young bride, Elizabeth Patterson, lived out their year of this first notorious American experiment in international marriages.

Mary Carroll, eldest daughter of Charles Carroll, the signer, and first daughter of the house to be married from Doughoregan, was wed in 1787, at the age of seventeen years, to Richard Caton, an English cotton merchant and geologist, who settled in Baltimore in 1785. Her marriage portion was the land and homestead on and around which the present-day suburb of Baltimore, Catonsville, grew up. She was the mother of four daughters, three of whom, as previously mentioned, were so remarkable for their beauty that they were known as the "Three American Graces." They married Englishmen of high rank. Her portrait in the study at Doughoregan shows that she, herself, was the possessor of beauty, and tradition asserts that she was distinguished for her fine mental gifts.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Catharine Carroll, the second daughter of the signer, married, in 1801, Robert Goodloe Harper, of South Carolina, from which state he had entered Congress as a representative in 1794, as a member of the Federal party. He removed to Maryland after his marriage and, in 1815, was United States senator from Maryland. His country home was Oakland, in Howard County, not far from Doughoregan.

The Caton beauties, granddaughters of the signer, were the attraction at a grand ball given at Hampton, by the Ridgelys in 1809, and their social conquests were innumerable both in this country and abroad. Mary Caton became the wife of Robert Patterson, brother of Madame Jerome Bonaparte. Louisa Caton married Col. Sir Tilton Bathurst Hervey, who fought under Wellington in Spain and was his aide at Waterloo. She afterwards became the Duchess of Leeds. Elizabeth Caton became Lady Stafford.

After the death of Robert Patterson in 1822, his widow with her sisters Louisa and Elizabeth was at the country-seat of the Duke of Wellington in England, where she met the Marquis of Wellesley, a widower of sixty-three. It proved to be a case of love at first sight, and shortly after they were married in Dublin, where the Marquis was living in state as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1826, the former Mrs. Patterson presided at a ball in Dublin, seated under a canopy of gold and scarlet.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

Emily Caton, the fourth of the daughters of Mary Carroll Caton, married John MacTavish, British consul in Baltimore, and spent her life in this country. Mrs. MacTavish lived first at Brooklandwood, in the Green Spring Valley, Baltimore County, Maryland, now the home of Isaac E. Emerson, Esq., but, later, at Folly Quarter, the truly regal home which her grandfather built for her near his home in Howard County, now the home of Van Lear Black and family, of Howard County and Baltimore.

When it was sold out of the family about thirty years ago, after nearly fifty years of wear and tear, Folly Quarter brought the large amount of one hundred thousand dollars. This gives a shrewd idea of the luxury, comfort and splendour of its exterior and interior appointment when new. The house fronts east and is built of granite blocks which average in size thirty-five inches long and nineteen inches in thickness. In the centre of the front and the rear of the house, which are almost identical in appearance, are massive porches with six solid granite columns each. These columns are six feet in circumference at the base and taper slightly as they rise. That cost was little object in building the house is shown by the fact that the rain spouts which carry off the water from the metal-sheathed roof are of copper. It is said that among the appointments of the mansion when it was new was a marble bathing pool, located a little distance from the house and connected with it by a subterranean passageway. It is not known where this pool was, if it ever existed, as there is no trace of it now.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

How and why Folly Quarter received its name is a question not easy to solve. Says the historian Warfield:

In the surrounding country is a tradition currently believed to the effect that Charles Carroll, son of the Signer, had accumulated a considerable sum of money from his allowances. In looking about for a good investment his attention was called to a fine tract of land several miles west of Doughoregan Manor. He was pleased with it and purchased it. When he informed his venerable and distinguished father of the fact the latter, according to the story, exclaimed:

"That is folly; we have enough land now."

And so, tradition has it, the farm was known ever afterward as "Folly Quarter" or "The Folly."

Mr. and Mrs. MacTavish made their home at "Folly" for many years, and after their death it passed to their son Charles Carroll MacTavish, whose home it was with his family until he disposed of the estate to Mr. Charles M. Dougherty, of Baltimore. Mr. Dougherty made the place a summer home until he removed to New Orleans about twenty-five years ago.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

Shortly after his removal he sold it to Royal Phelps, Esq., of New York, father-in-law of the late former Governor John Lee Carroll, of Doughoregan, great-grandson of the signer. The next owner was Gov. Carroll, from whom it passed to his son Charles Carroll, the present master of Doughoregan, and from him to its owner, Van Lear Black, Esq.

After the death of Charles Carroll, the signer, in 1832, the next master of Doughoregan was Charles Carroll, born 1801, at Homewood, grandson of the signer, and son of Charles Carroll, of Homewood, and Harriet Chew, his wife. The other children of Charles Carroll, of Homewood, and Harriet Chew, were: Elizabeth, who married Dr. Aaron Tucker; Mary Sophia, who married Hon. Richard Bayard; Benjamin Chew Carroll; Harriet Julian, who married Hon. John Lee, of Needwood, Frederick County, Maryland; Louisa, who married Isaac Rand.

This Charles, known as "Colonel Charles" Carroll, married, in 1825, Mary Digges Lee and had issue: Charles, inheritor of Doughoregan; Mary, who married Dr. Eleazer Acosta; Louisa, who married George Cavendish Taylor, nephew of Lord Waterpark, an Irish peer; and John Lee Carroll, born 1830.

Charles Carroll, son of Colonel Charles, was the sixth Charles Carroll of the line in this country. He married Miss Caroline Thompson, of Staunton, Virginia, daughter of Judge Lucas P. Thompson, and of a distinguished lineage, one of her ancestors having been Colonel Ball, grandfather of George Washington. Having no children, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll decided to live in Europe, where Mrs. Carroll became famous for her beauty and social charm. The manor was purchased by John Lee Carroll, brother of Charles.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

John Lee Carroll was only three years of age when his father inherited Doughoregan. He studied at Mount Saint Mary's School, Georgetown College, and Harvard Law school. In 1855 he removed to New York, where he met and married Anita Phelps, daughter of Royal Phelps, of the extensive South American importing house. In 1861, because of the feeble health of his father, he returned to Doughoregan, which was his home for the rest of his life. In 1874 his wife died. In 1875 he was nominated and elected Governor of Maryland. In the succeeding summer he was the representative of the state at the great centennial exposition in Philadelphia. Two years subsequent to this he married Miss Mary Carter Thompson, of Staunton, Virginia, sister of his brother Charles' wife. He died in 1905, leaving a large descent.

The children of Governor John Lee Carroll and his first wife, Anita Phelps, are: the Countess de Kergolay; the Baroness de La Grange; Royal Phelps Carroll, who married Miss Langdon, of New York; Helen Carroll, who married Mr. Herbert Robbins, of New York, and gave recently, in memory of her mother, St.

---

DOUGHOREGAN MANOR

---

Anthony's chapel to St. Matthew's church, Washington; and Charles, the present owner of the manor, who married Miss Susanna Bancroft, granddaughter of the historian, George Bancroft.

In his second marriage, Governor Carroll had but one child, Philip Acosta Carroll, born 1879, an attorney of New York City.

Of the union of Charles Carroll and Miss Bancroft there has been one son, Charles Carroll, the Eighth, born 1891.

There are other branches of the Carroll family in Maryland of equal antiquity with that of the Doughoregan branch and of almost as great conspicuousness. A distinguished Carroll branch only distantly connected with the Doughoregan Carrolls is that of Dr. Charles Carroll, who came to this country about 1718. That he was related to Charles Carroll, the First, grandfather of the signer, is proved by the fact that both of these men used on their seals the full arms of the Ely O'Carrolls, as Mrs. Hester Dorsey Richardson has pointed out in her valuable "Side Lights on Maryland History," and by the fact that Charles Carroll, the First, made over to Dr. Charles Carroll a portion of his lands. Dr. Charles Carroll married Dorothy Blake, granddaughter of Henrietta Maria Lloyd, goddaughter of Queen Henrietta Maria, of England. He was the father of Charles Carroll, barrister, a notable figure in pre-revolutionary annals in Maryland (contending for fame with Charles Carroll, the signer) and builder of the Carroll mansion in Carroll Park, one of the parks of Baltimore city.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The Carroll mansion in Carroll Park, Baltimore, is distinguished for the beauty of its outlook over Winans Cove, a portion of the water-front of that city, and for the charming old grounds around it, now kept up in good fashion by the city park board. It is a substantial building to which the two wings now gracing it on either side have been added within the last decade. The house originally had one wing on the west side, which was merely a brick addition without particular grace of design. From the cellar of the house extends a subterranean passageway leading no one knows where, though busybodies assert that it goes to the water-front and was used for smuggling in early days, a supposition that hardly obtains credence with those who know the position and wealth of the builder of the mansion. The interior of the house has no particular detail of interest except a staircase which leads off to the left from the front door.

Another Carroll family of distinction was early seated in Saint Mary's County, and the name has been associated with Susquehannah, a historic old homestead of St. Mary's County, Maryland, now destroyed. From Capt. Henry Carroll came Governor Thomas King Carroll, of Maryland, of Kingston Hall, Somerset County, Maryland.

---

HAMPTON

BALTIMORE COUNTY, MARYLAND

RIDGELY

---

It is difficult to deal in superlatives, but the most cautious and canny of mortals might feel no hesitancy in saying that Hampton, the seat of the Ridgelys (of Robert Ridgely) of Maryland, is the largest colonial mansion in Maryland; and the historian, whose delving mind cares little for the ordinary distinctions of 'great or small, would find in the traditions of the old home a store wherein he might learn, amongst other things, how large a part its occupants have played in the development of their state. The title "colonial" may be denied to Hampton by the purist in terms, as its foundations were not laid until 1788—the very last minutes of the colonial era in this county—but it is so purely Georgian in design and so representative in spirit of the colonial era that the lover of things of this period will always wish to have its acquaintance.

Hampton is about thirteen miles due north of Baltimore and about two miles north of Towson, Baltimore County, in which county it is, likewise, situated, and is the centre of a broad and fertile tract of land embracing nearly five thousand acres. The house is approached through an avenue of trees,—as are almost all of the colonial homes of Maryland and the south, generally. The grounds around the building are beautifully terraced and occupy much more space than is usually allotted to the parking around a private dwelling. They contain fine old trees which shade the house at all hours of the day and make it difficult to see it entire,—except from the rear, in which direction lie the famous Hampton gardens.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

On the exterior, the first impression that the mansion gives is that of great mass, and then one notices the details—the cupola first, a very distinctive feature of the building and one found in no other homestead of the type in Maryland; and, second, the urn-shaped finials on the parapet of the central portion. The walls are bare and the windows not especially well disposed, while the wings of the house are small and not in good proportion to the central building. The front and rear entrances of the mansion are great porticos with a floor above the first story elevation. Over the rear door which leads out into the garden ivy and honeysuckle have been allowed to grow in a huge mass of green with long, tender, verdant streamers.

The most impressive single feature of Hampton is to be found on the interior and is the great hall which leads from front to back of the building. It is at least thirty feet wide and high in proportion, and the panelled walls are hung closely with family portraits. From this great hall lead smaller ways to the wings, and the

CENTRAL PORTION OF HAMPTON
1783

---

HAMPTON

---

dining-room, sitting-room, reception room, and parlour open upon it. The rooms on the first floor are all panelled and the woodwork throughout the house is of sound and agreeable construction.

Capt. Charles Ridgely, builder of Hampton, was a descendant of Robert Ridgely, of Saint Inigoes, Saint Mary's County, Maryland, whose name is to be found in Maryland records preceding the year 1681. A connection has never been established between this family, the family from which spring the Ridgelys of Delaware, and the family of William Ridgely, of Maryland, a contemporary of the Robert Ridgely aforementioned, yet superficial evidence all points to the conclusion that there is such a connection and the physical resemblance, even, between members of different families is often such as to strike attention.

Robert Ridgely, of St. Mary's County, had a son, Charles Ridgely, of Baltimore County, who married Deborah Dorsey. Their grandson, Capt. Charles Ridgely, whose wife was likewise a Dorsey (Rebecca Dorsey), was the builder of Hampton. Captain Ridgely was a gallant soldier in the Revolution and was a gay blade. His wife was a member of the young society of Methodists then barely established in this country; and it is said that while sober Mrs. Ridgely opened Hampton with a prayer meeting in the parlour, rollicking Captain Ridgely celebrated the same event with a card party in the attic. This marriage was not fruitful and Captain Ridgely left Hampton to his nephew, Charles Ridgely Carnan, son of John Carnan and Achsah Ridgely, on condition that his legatee change the order of his name so that he would be known as Charles Carnan Ridgely instead of Charles Ridgely Carnan. Charles Carnan Ridgely, Governor of Maryland from 1815 to 1818, was thus the second master of Hampton. He married Priscilla Dorsey, of Belmont, daughter of Caleb Dorsey and Priscilla Hill Dorsey and sister of Rebecca Dorsey Ridgely, his uncle's wife.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The master of Hampton to-day is Capt. John Ridgely, grandson of Governor Charles Carnan Ridgely, and son of the late Capt. Charles Ridgely and Margaretta Sophia Howard. His wife is Helen West Stuart, a writer, author of "Old Brick Churches of Maryland" and other historical works. The family circle of Hampton consists of Mr. and Mrs. John Ridgely, Miss Helen S. Ridgely, Messrs. David Stuart and Julian White Ridgely and Mr. and Mrs. John Ridgely, Jr.

Not far from the house is the Hampton burying ground which contains the earthly part of the successive generations that have lived in the old mansion. With the exception of the Lloyd cemetery at Wye House and that of the Tilghmans at The Hermitage, in Queen Anne's County, Maryland, there is no private graveyard in Maryland so impressive in aspect or so well kept up. It has been described by Mrs. Helen West Ridgely:

SPRING HILL

CUPOLA OF HAMPTON

---

HAMPTON

---

In the family vault at Hampton, built of marble and brick, repose six and possibly seven generations of Ridgelys. Captain Charles Ridgely, born in 1733, died June 28, 1790, made provisions in his will for the building of this vault. Tradition says that his remains, with those of his father, Col. Charles Ridgely, and other members of his family, were placed here when the city of Baltimore ran its streets through the Spring Garden property, owned by the Ridgelys, and obliterated all traces of an earlier burying ground. A complete record of those buried at Hampton begins, however, with the succeeding generation, and as one looks through the iron grating of the doorway, one sees a wall of marble slabs duly inscribed with the names of the dead. This final touch, by which a charnel house was transformed into a worthy monument to her race, was given by the late Mrs. Charles Ridgely, a granddaughter of Governor Charles Ridgely, with whom the record begins. The inscriptions are:

Governor Charles Ridgely, born Dec. 6, 1760; died July 17, 1829.

Priscilla, wife of Gov. Ridgely, died April 30, 1814.

Charles Ridgely, Jr., eldest son of Gov. Ridgely & Priscilla, his wife, born August 26, 1783; died July 19, 1819.

Rebecca D. Hanson, wife of Charles W. Hanson and daughter of Governor Ridgely, born March 5, 1786; died Sept. 1837.

Chas. W. Hanson, died Dec. 8th, 1853, in the 70th year of his age.

Sophia Gough Howard, wife of James Howard & daughter of Governor Ridgely, b. July 3, 1800; d. April 18, 1828.

Priscilla Hill White, wife of Stevenson White & daughter of Governor Ridgely, born March 17, 1796, died April 10, 1820.

David Latimer Ridgely, 3rd son of Gov. Ridgely, b. Nov. 19th 1798; died 1846.

Mary Louisa, widow of David L. Ridgely, born July 4th, 1808; d. Nov. 8, 1863.

Eight children of D. L. & M. L. Ridgely.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

John Ridgely of H., son of Gov. Ridgely, b. at Hampton Jan. 9th, 1790; died at H. July 17, 1867.

Eliza E., wife of John Ridgely of H., b. Feb. 10, 1803; d. Dec. 20, 1867. 3 infant children of John and Eliza E. Ridgely.

Mr. & Mrs. Nicholas G. Ridgely, the parents of Mrs. John Ridgely, and John Clemm, son of Daniel & Johanna Ridgely, a young cousin who died Sept. 26, 1839.

Charles Ridgely of H., son of John & Eliza E. Ridgely, born March 22, 1838, died at Rome, Italy, on Good Friday, March 29, 1872.

Margaretta S. Ridgely, widow of Charles Ridgely of H., b. Sept. 24, 1824, died March 31st, 1904.

Rev. Charles Ridgely Howard and John Eager Howard, brothers of Mrs. Margaretta Ridgely, her son Charles and her grandsons John Stewart and Charles, complete the number.

The vault yard, inclosed by a high brick wall and entered through an iron gateway, also shelters the dead. Here in one corner is the tomb of Julianna Howard, a sister of the late Mrs. Ridgely and a granddaughter of Governor Ridgely. She was born August 25, 1821; died May 22, 1853.

A Celtic cross marks the grave of Eliza Buckler, daughter of John and Eliza Ridgely, and the body of her first husband, John Campbell White, reposes beside her. She was born October 28, 1828; died March 3, 1894.

John Campbell White, departed this life February 6, 1853, in the 28th year of his age. Near him is the grave of an infant son. An antique altar tomb is inscribed:

To the Memory of Eliza Ridgely, wife of N. G. Ridgely and daughter of M. and E. Eichelberger, Departed this life the 10th of February, 1803, a few hours after the birth of an only Daughter aged 19 years and 2 months.

On the opposite side of the inclosure is a modern marble cross to the memory of Howard Ridgely, the third son of Charles and Margaretta S. Ridgely, born January 7, 1855; died September 28, 1900.

---

HAMPTON

---

There are also several unmarked graves level with the ground. Periwinkle overruns the whole inclosure and, with the ancient ivy on the walls, enables the spot to retain its beauty throughout the changing seasons of the year.

A summer retreat of the Ridgelys of Hampton was for many years Spring Hill, a very quaint and beautiful little brick homestead in Howard County, Maryland, now the home of Garnett Y. Clark, Esq., an attorney of Baltimore. The house is beautifully situated on a little hill and contains in the interior some very pretty mantel carving. It is not large, but has the charm which comes of years sturdily maintained against the encroachments of the elements.

---

TULIP HILL

WEST RIVER, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, MARYLAND

GALLOWAY—MAXCEY—MARKOE—HUGHES—MURRAY
—PARKER

---

TULIP HILL is famous for its front and garden doorways, its exquisite interior decoration, and its whole grace and symmetry. It is a large house, though so well proportioned that its size does not obtrude itself upon one, and gains its name from the magnificent grove of tulip poplar trees which make up the large park through which the visitor drives to reach the mansion. These trees have been a land-mark to sailors navigating West River for a century and a half, and they tower far up into the air on the crest of the high ridge on which the homestead is situated, showing plainly against the sky. Their dark mass of green seen in silhouette from the water has a grotesque resemblance to the outline of the roof of a giant's house.

The mansion consists of a central building with wings, and the roof of the main structure is pitched very sharply, giving an unusual emphasis to this portion. Another unusual feature is the decorative disposition of the two great chimneys which grace the central building. Instead of being placed with their

ENTRANCE TO TULIP HILL.

1746

---

TULIP HILL

---

longest dimension parallel to the transverse of the house, as most chimneys are placed, they are set with their longest dimension parallel to the longitudinal line of the house and are cut out in the middle so as to give them a very light and airy effect.

The main doorway, seen as one approaches through the grove of great tulip trees, consists of a large portico with four simple pillars. In the cap of the portico is carved a Cupid's figure represented as throwing flowers on those who enter the house. Set in the wall above is a tablet of stone carved in a floral design and this carries the eye on up to the ornamented bull's-eye window in the attic.

From the rear of the house is to be obtained a wide view embracing West River and the hills beyond. The ground falls sharply towards the river and is carried away from the house in three long terraces. The garden is to one side and to the rear.

In the rear of the house is the Tulip Hill garden doorway so widely copied. It is a simple shell portico, not intricate at all in design but beautifully ornamented with floral carving and very light and graceful in effect.

Entering the house through the front doorway one finds oneself in a broad hallway which runs to the back of the house, facing a superb double arch extending across the hall. From the point of this arch hangs a lamp. The stairway commences at the arch. The walls of the hallway are wainscoted and the stairs contain much beautiful carving. The newel post is very large and heavy with the banisters and rails of mahogany carried around it in a whirl.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

All of the rooms on the first floor are panelled in hard old oak and the fireplaces and mantels contain much beautiful carving.

To get a good idea of the solidity of the construction of Tulip Hill one should make a trip to the cellar, which runs completely under the house. The foundation walls are as thick as the battlements of a castle, and the chimney pillars are at least six feet square. The beams average in measurement, fourteen inches by twenty inches by sixty feet, and show the marks of the axes which hewed them out. Here are to be found a wine vault and a servant's oven for baking bread. The slaves' dungeon is to be found in the right wing of the house.

The history of Tulip Hill takes one back to the early days of the Friends in Maryland. Owing to the liberality of the proprietary in regard to religious belief, the province soon became a haven for those oppressed for their conscience's sake, among whom were the Friends. They came to the province in great numbers in the seventeenth century and formed two great colonies: one in Talbot County on the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay; the other at West River where Tulip Hill is situated. The remains of the old Quaker meet-

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO TULIP HILL

---

TULIP HILL

---

ing-house of West River are to be found not a quarter of a mile from the mansion. Samuel Galloway, the builder of Tulip Hill, was a Friend, as were all of his neighbours,—those great families which sent out sons to many states—the Chews, the Murrays, the Mercers, the Chestons, and the Richardsons.

The Galloways in Maryland descend from two brothers, sons of Richard Galloway, of London, England. Samuel, the second brother, married, first, Sarah, by whom he had four children, one of whom, Sarah (Galloway), married March 9, 1720, Henry Hill; and another, Hannah, married a Ford. By his second wife, Anne Pardoe, who died April, 1723, he had a numerous posterity.

Anne Pardoe Galloway, we are told, was an acceptable minister in the Society of Friends.

John Galloway, son of Samuel, married Mary, daughter of Samuel and Mary Thomas, and had three children: Samuel; Mary, who married June 13, 1747, Benjamin Chew, afterwards Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and who built that beautiful old mansion in Germantown, Philadelphia, known as Cliveden; and Joseph, who married Ann Cookson.

Samuel, son of John, married Anne Chew, sister of that Benjamin Chew whom his sister married, and in 1745, three years after his marriage, built Tulip Hill to celebrate, tradition says, the birth of his first infant,

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Mary, who married Thomas Ringgold, of Chestertown, Maryland.

Other children of Samuel Galloway and Anne Chew, his wife, were: Anne, who married James Cheston; Benjamin, who married Henrietta, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Chew, of Cecil County, Maryland; and John, inheritor of Tulip Hill, who married Sarah Chew, sister of his brother's wife.

John Galloway was a witness to the burning of the brig Peggy Stewart, in the harbour of Annapolis in 1774. The vessel was loaded with tea and was destroyed by the Sons of Liberty after the passage of the second Stamp Act. Galloway wrote a letter to his father at Tulip Hill, in which he described the occurrence:

The committee then ordered the tea from on board the brig, but some of the mob called out that it should also share the same fate. The committee then with the consent of Mr. Dick declared the vessel and tea, together, should be burnt. . . . And then Mr. Stewart went on board of his vessel and set fire with his own hands and she was burning when I left.

The sons of Samuel Galloway were educated in England. Samuel, the eldest son, died without issue. John, whose letter about the Peggy Stewart we have read, had an only daughter, Mary. He died in 1810 and was buried in the Friends' graveyard near his home.

Mary Galloway married Virgil Maxcey and had two daughters: Mary, who married Francis Markoe; and HAIR AND STAIR OF TULIP HILL.

---

TULIP HILL

---

Sarah, who married Col. George W. Hughes. At Mrs. Hughes' death, Tulip Hill was sold to Mr. Henry M. Murray, of Ivy Neck, West River, who, not long before his recent death, disposed of it to its present owner, Mr. Dupont Parker, a Marylander by birth and now a resident in Nevada, where he is prominently interested in railroad development.

The present occupant uses the old home as a summer place. His family consists of his wife and two daughters.

---

CEDAR PARK

WEST RIVER, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, MARYLAND
GALLOWAY—SPRIGG—MERCER—MURRAY

---

NOT far from Tulip Hill, the magnificent old Galloway mansion at West River, Anne Arundel County, Maryland, is Cedar Park, another Galloway memorial and probably the oldest large dwelling-house in Maryland. It was built between 1690 and 1700 by Richard Galloway, the first of his name in the New World, and is markedly different in appearance from the other colonial mansions in Maryland.

Cedar Park is of the style of an old English farmhouse of the period of Queen Anne. It consists of a simple, single building with great chimneys at either end, and a long, low, sloping roof, which is carried nearly to the ground and whose eaves project far from the walls. An addition at the back of the house, wherein is the present-day living room, is of comparatively modern construction, having been erected in the last century. A simple little porch marks the front door and, for the rest, the house with its deep-inset windows and great roof nearly touching the ground has a singularly self-contained and immobile expression, like a terrapin with its head in its shell. The outline of the chimneys is very distinctive and these are, no doubt, the most characteristic features of the quaint homestead.

---

CEDAR PARK

---

The interior of Cedar Park is cheery, cool and airy, though the sun struggling through the little windows in the immensely thick walls has difficulty in reaching all of the corners of the rooms. The ceilings are surprisingly high and the walls are without ornament. The whole interior of the house is plain but the solid mahogany staircase, which runs from the back of the hall leading to the front door, attracts attention immediately. The wood of the stair is as black as old Spanish leather now and every part of it—steps, railing, banisters, and all—is made of the costly material of which our great-grandfathers were so fond.

The grounds of Cedar Park comprise about four hundred acres of park and farming land, though the original estate was larger. In the rear of the house is a level green used as a bowling green in the old days. To the right of this is a garden maintained very beautifully by the present-day occupants of the old home. From the bowling green and from the garden may be obtained very enchanting outlooks over a leafy descent to the distance where are the waters of one of the arms of West River. Great trees, many decades old, shade the house and the grounds around, and in the floral border surrounding the old bowling green are many rare shrubs whose names are not even known to the majority of people of the present day.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Cedar Park was purchased in 1893 by Dr. James M. Murray and is now the home of his three daughters, the Misses Alice Maynadier, Margaret Cheston, and Elizabeth Murray. Before this it had belonged to the Mercers, and the Spriggs, from whom we go back to the Galloways, the family of the builder.

Richard Galloway, builder of Cedar Park, became a tenant on the farm of which it is a part some time before 1689, the year in which his marriage was celebrated to Elizabeth Lawrence, daughter of Benjamin Lawrence, of Marlborough, Wiltshire, England; and in 1697 he purchased the property from his wife's father, who held the patent to it. There seems to have been no children to this marriage, but by a second marriage, he had sons, Samuel and Richard, from the first of whom came the line of which was the builder of Tulip Hill. He died August 8, 1736.

Richard Galloway, the second, married Sophia Richardson, of West River, and died in 1740, leaving a daughter, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Sprigg, of Prince George's County. Elizabeth Galloway was a Quaker, as were all of her family, and this gay Sprigg, her suitor, was not! She refused consistently to marry him until he became a Friend. They had a great quarrel and her lover rode away, vowing that he would never come to see her again. The next month he was at the door of Cedar Park, in the straitest of Friends' garb and with the properest of Friends' dialect.

---

CEDAR PARK

---

“How is thee?” he asked soberly.

“Is thee a Friend?” inquired the fair Elizabeth.

The affirmative answer was all that was needed to signalize the plighting of their troth and they were shortly married.

Thomas Sprigg and Elizabeth Galloway had three sons, only one of whom lived to maturity. This son, Richard Sprigg, married Margaret Caile, of Dorchester County, Maryland, in 1765, and had a daughter, Sophia, born April 23, 1766, at Cedar Park, married Col. John F. Mercer, in 1785, and inherited the homestead. Another daughter married Dr. James Steuart, of Annapolis.

Mrs. Sophia Galloway and her daughter, Mrs. Sprigg, lived for many years as widows at Cedar Park.

The Galloway family of Maryland divided into many branches, every one of which terminated in female descendants, and the name is extinct.

---

RATCLIFFE MANOR

NEAR EASTON, TALBOT COUNTY, MARYLAND

HOLLYDAY—GIBSON—HATHAWAY

---

ENRY HOLLYDAY, the son of Col. James Hollyday, builder of Readbourne, built Ratcliffe Manor for his bride, Anna Maria Robins, whom he married in 1749. It is situated in Talbot County, on the banks of the beautiful Tred Avon River, and is not far from the busy little Eastern Shore metropolis of Easton.

The site of Ratcliffe Manor is such that it has a charming outlook. One sees the windings of the Tred Avon and the fine farms of this rolling, fertile country. To approach the house one drives through a long avenue of trees set in rows about one hundred feet apart, and this avenue is bounded by white bar fences of oldtime appearance. The home grounds are encircled by a fence of this same fashion and in back of the house the land is terraced, falling away to the river in graceful green sweeps. Here, too, are shrubs and flowers, while giant trees give a grateful shade from summer's sun.

In exterior view, Ratcliffe Manor has a great atmosphere of comfort and content. It is not large but very well proportioned. In design it follows the Maryland convention, consisting of a central building with a wing,

SHELL CUPBOARD AND ALCOVE WINDOW IN THE LIVING ROOM OF RATCLIFFE

---

RATCLIFFE MANOR

---

and the middle of the central portion is distinguished by a simple and beautiful portico and doorway.

In the interior of the house, one is again impressed with an air of comfort and good taste. The hall is small and does not continue to the back of the house. To the right of the door as you enter is the stairs. In the back of the house are two rooms,—a dining and a living room,—the latter of which opens upon the terraced garden, its avenue of ingress and egress being a doorway of exactly similar design to that in front of the house. To the left of the front door as you enter, is a little office, or study, wherein the master of the plantation in the old days interviewed his overseer and attended to the many small details of management of the place.

The rooms downstairs are panelled in hardwood and the fireplaces are very prettily carved. In the living room is a very beautiful old shell cupboard and an alcove window of rare charm.

The wing of the house contains the kitchen, the servants' rooms, and the pantry.

Ratcliffe Manor, the house, takes its name from Ratcliffe Manor, a survey made in the early days of the Maryland province and part of which was purchased with other lands by Henry Hollyday, the builder, when he was making a home for himself. In his will of 1789, this Henry Hollyday leaves to his wife (Anna Maria Robins) during her life "the plantation and lands where I now live and all my lands adjoining or contiguous thereto being part of Ratcliffe Manor, part of Tilghman Fortune, Part of Discovery and Turkey Park.”

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

In this will is named a daughter, Henrietta Maria, wife of Samuel Chamberlaine, Jr., and two sons, Thomas and Henry. Thomas, the elder, was to inherit the homestead and lands at the death of his mother. In a codicil, the maker of the will revokes his bequest to Thomas in favor of Henry because “whereas the conduct and deportment of my son, Thomas, for a considerable time past, as well towards his Mother and myself and others of my family has been and still continues to be such as has given the greatest anxiety and grief, and being unable to determine in mine own Judgment whether his said conduct and deportment proceed from any injury he may have sustained in his intellects, or are the effect of an obstinate and undutiful Temper of Mind, I think it necessary, in either case, to make some alteration in the disposition of my estate. . . .”

Henry Hollyday, the son, lived to a green old age and died in March, 1850, leaving his lands to be divided in three parts, his three sons—Richard C., Thomas R., and William M.—to have choice in the order in which they were named. Richard C., the eldest son, chose as his portion that third which contained the mansion and at his death left the place to his wife Marietta Hollyday, who married again, becoming the wife of former

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO RATCLIFFE

RATCLIFFE, FROM THE GARDEN

---

RATCLIFFE MANOR

---

United States Senator Charles Hooper Gibson. From her it was purchased, in 1903, by its present occupant, A. A. Hathaway, formerly of Milwaukee, Wis.; Mr. Hathaway's family consists of his wife, who was a Miss Finney, of Milwaukee, and five children,—three sons and two daughters.

Ratcliffe Manor has no ghosts and no stories of violent death or suicide. It speaks simply of gentility and good living.

---

WYE HOUSE

TALBOT COUNTY, MARYLAND

LLOYD

---

O name in Maryland history is evocative of richer historic memories than that of Lloyd. Seven generations of this illustrious family have lived at Wye House in Talbot County, beginning with Edward Lloyd, the First, who established himself there in 1668. Since that time the estate has been handed down from one generation of Edward Lloyd to another.

The first two Edwards returned to England and died there, but in the old family burying ground at Wye, which stands back of the manor-house, there lie four succeeding generations of the name. Edward Lloyd the First and his brother Cornelius settled in Virginia about 1635, in which year each received from Capt. John West grants of land on the Elizabeth River.

Edward Lloyd was a justice and lawyer at Norfolk in 1645, and a member of the House of Burgesses from 1644 until 1649, in which latter year he joined the Puritan Colony in Maryland. On the 20th of April, 1650, the district embracing Providence was erected into a county and given the name of Anne Arundel, and Edward Lloyd was made commander of this county by Governor Stone. On the organization of Talbot County in the year 1660, having large landed estates on the Eastern Shore, he removed to that county and built his residence on the Wye River, calling it Wye House.

---

WYE HOUSE

---

In the year 1660 Cæcilius Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, commissioned Col. Edward Lloyd—among others—to be Deputy Governor of Maryland in the event of the death of Governor Philip Calvert. Philemon Lloyd dying before his father, the estate passed to his son Edward Lloyd, the Second, grandson of the first master of Wye.

The original Wye House was burned by the British in 1776, and was looted of its fine paintings and rich plate and other treasures. All the old records of the Lloyd family up to that time were then destroyed. After the war several pieces of plate bearing the family arms were returned by the crown.

Of the original manor house only a fragment remains, and that is now used as an outbuilding. The present Wye House was built just before the end of the Revolutionary War by Edward Lloyd, the Fourth, and remains intact to-day just as constructed more than a century and a quarter ago.

The main building is of two lofty stories, containing the hall, drawing-room, parlour, dining-room and chambers, all of noble proportions, and connects by corridors with one-story wings, in which are the library on one side and domestic offices on the other, presenting a pleasing façade of two hundred feet, commanding a superb view of the Wye River and the bay.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Back of the manor-house is an old garden with many winding walks bounded by box-wood hedges. To one side of the garden is a beautiful stretch of lawn bounded on each side by hedges, at the ends of which is an imposing old building, the conservatory—a relic of colonial days. To the left of the structure is an arch of brick flanked on each side by a wall fast crumbling away. No one seems to know how old this wall is, but it was probably built when the original house was constructed.

An arch marks the entrance to the burying ground at Wye. On each side of the walk stands a gigantic tree—mute sentinels guarding those who are slumbering in peace in the graveyard, which contains the remains of many illustrious members of the Lloyd family. A number of the gravestones are crumbling, while others have been repaired, and they are interesting not only on account of their great age, but for their quaint inscriptions.

One of the oldest and most interesting in the graveyard is that over the last resting-place of the famous Henrietta Maria Lloyd, wife of Philemon, son of Edward Lloyd, the First. The inscription on this stone reads:

---

WYE HOUSE

---

Henrietta Maria Lloyd,
Shee who now takes her Rest within this Tomb
Had Rachel's Face and Leah's fruitful womb,
Abigail's Wisdom, Lydia's faithful heart,
With Martha's care and Mary's better Part.
Who died the 21st day of May (Anno) Dom. 1697, aged 50 years, —months, 23 days.

To whose Memory Richard Bennett dedicates this Tomb.

Of this Henrietta Maria Lloyd it has been said "the name of this beautiful, gracious lady stands for whatever is gentle in birth and in breeding, for whatsoever is excellent in character and conduct, for whatsoever is of good report of the honorable men and women of old Maryland." She was of foreign birth, and tradition has it that Queen Henrietta Maria of England stood sponsor for her when she was christened.

From the Inventory and Accounts, Liber 15, page 198, Prerogative Court Records of Maryland, November 2, 1697, we quote:

"An inventory of all and singular the goods and chattels and credits of Madam Henrietta Maria Lloyd, of Talbot County, in the Province of Maryland, lately deceased."

Among these goods and chattels and credits may be mentioned Madam Lloyd's clothes, which are inventoried as follows:

1 satin gown and petticoat, 1 silk gown and petticoat, 1 old silk gown and coat, 1 mourning gown and quilted petticoat, 1 silk mantel, 2 silk petticoats and scarf, a good warm gown, 2 smock coats and 2 waistcoats, a parcel of laces, a pair of

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

bodices, a gauze coat, 1 flowered satin party coat, 4 party coats, 4 pairs of shoes and 1 pair of galoches, silk and worsted stockings, 2 head dresses, a box of handkerchiefs, 3 pictures, a parcel of neck lace, 1 diamond ring, 1 mourning ring, 4 stone rings, 3 rings and a pair of earrings, 2 pictures, a little box of cash, a flowered "satting" morning gowne, a long scarfe lyned with velvet, a parcel of silver lace and footings, 2 pairs stays, 1 black scarfe, 1 parcel of beads and silver cross and snuff-box, 1 gowne and party coats, 1 silk petticoat with silver fringe, 1 silk mourning gowne, 1 riding gowne, 1 sable tippet and strings, 2 short aprons, girdle and mask, etc.

In her will Madam Lloyd disposed of an unusually large estate, and it is interesting to note among her effects "the great wrought silver dish" which she left to her three daughters.

Undoubtedly one of the prettiest romances associated with Wye House is that of the two brothers, Edward Lloyd, the Second, and Philemon, who were rivals for the beautiful Sarah Covington, a winsome Quaker maiden. According to the tale, Sarah Covington, mounted on a pillion behind her father, rode into Tred Haven to attend that notable yearly meeting to which came William Penn, Lord and Lady Baltimore, and others of note. The two dashing cavaliers from Wye House, seeing the Quaker maiden from Somerset for the first time, fell desperately in love with her.

At the close of the meeting, without acquainting each other of their intentions, the young cavaliers rode hard and fast by different routes into the neighbouring county, meeting at the fair Quaker's gate. Guessing each other's secret, they agreed that he who had seen her first should first have the privilege of seeking to win her. Philemon, it appears, had seen her upon first entering the meeting-house, but Edward had seen her on the way to the meeting-house, and of him the Quaker maid's father had inquired the road. Whereupon Philemon mounted his horse and rode away, while Edward entered the Covington home and in due course married the fair Sarah.

---

WYE HOUSE

---

Sarah Covington, after the death of Edward Lloyd, married Col. James Hollyday, and was first mistress of the mansion known as Readbourne in Queen Anne County. Philemon Lloyd was Deputy Secretary of the province in the year 1709. He was also a member of the Council and was a man of great prominence and influence in his day.

Each Edward Lloyd, seven of whom have been masters of Wye House, in succeeding to the great ancestral estates of Wye, fell heir to offices of public trust and honor, and we find in this distinguished family three governors, councillors, burgesses, members of Assembly, presidential electors, captains and colonels in colonial and revolutionary times.

Edward Lloyd, the Fourth, was a conspicuous patriot through the entire revolutionary period. He was a member of the Provincial Conventions in 1775 and 1776. He was chosen by the convention of 1775 a member of the commission of safety of the Eastern Shore. In 1780, he was a delegate to the lower house of Assembly, and in 1781-1786 and 1791 was elected to the State Senate. In 1783-1784, he was delegate from Maryland to the Continental Congress, and in 1788 was a member of the State Convention to ratify the Federal Constitution.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

His son Edward was a member of Congress from 1806 to 1809, in which latter year he became Governor of Maryland. He was also a presidential elector in 1812, and cast his vote for Madison. From 1816 to 1826, in which year he resigned, he served in the United States Senate. His successors have continued to live the life of wealthy country gentlemen, but have ever responded to the call for public service, in the discharge of which they have reflected credit upon their family name, and upon the State of Maryland.

With Wye House is connected the name of that strange historic character, Fred Douglass. This mulatto boy, the illegitimate son of a white man of considerable learning and a coloured woman who was owned by a sailing master in the employ of Governor Lloyd, was born at St. Michael's. Until he was eight years of age this Fred Douglass was much at Wye, and played not only with the little pickaninnies there, but frequently with the governor's son, Daniel.

When about nine years of age, the boy, who had accompanied his master on a trip to Baltimore, ran away and was lost sight of for years, until he turned up in the person of Fred Douglass, a well-educated and travelled man of the world. He was said to have been the first coloured man who was ever dined by Queen Victoria, an honour which was later accorded to Booker T. Washington. He was also entertained at the White House by President Cleveland, although in so doing the President was severely censured. Douglass was at one time Minister to Hayti, and later became Marshal of the District of Columbia.

---

WYE HOUSE

---

About 1881, the old man was moved to visit the scenes of his childhood. In company with several custom officers from Baltimore, he one day journeyed to Wye, and in the absence of Col. Edward Lloyd was shown over the estate by the colonel's son Howard. Although he was but a child when he had last visited Wye, he recalled by name many of the points, creeks, bayous, which had even then been forgotten by the boatmen around St. Michaels.

It is said that the venerable old negro, apparently oblivious of his companions, fell to musing in a negro dialect: "Dar," he said, "is war me and Mars Dan useter trap rabbits."

Some years later Mr. Howard Lloyd, riding to Philadelphia, noticed the aged figure of Fred Douglass in the fore part of the car. Before reaching his destination, Mr. Lloyd went forward to speak to him. At first Douglass seemed not to recognize Mr. Lloyd and greeted him with a cold stare.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

"I don't believe you recognize me, Marshal."

The marshal paused, looked at him keenly, then jumping to his feet, hat in hand, he exclaimed, "Yes, I do; it is Mr. Howard Lloyd."

Douglass begged to be allowed to hold the watch of the former governor which the great-grandson wore at the time of the meeting. Speaking of this distinguished son of Maryland, Douglass said: "How well I remember him, stately old gentleman, moving about the farm in that quiet, dignified way of his, with his high hat and cane. I remember when the governor imported a bull of special breed and went out one day to inspect the animal. As he moved across the pasture, the bull glared at him with lowered head, but the governor, not scenting trouble, went on. Presently, with a roar, the animal made for the old gentleman. That," said Douglass, "was the only time I ever saw the governor act in an undignified manner, his hat went one way, his cane another, while the governor made for the fence."

Letters found in possession of John Brown implicated Douglass to a certain extent. Governor Wise of Virginia made a requisition on President Buchanan for the person of "Frederick Douglass, a negro man, supposed now to be in Michigan, charged with murder, robbery and inciting servile insurrection in the State of Virginia." Douglass went to Canada and then to England, and upon his return to America the matter had been lost sight of.

---

READBOURNE

QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

HOLLYDAY—PERRY

---

N ascending the Chester River, which forms the dividing line between Kent and Queen Anne's Counties on Maryland's famous Eastern Shore, one passes through a section not only of great fertility, and compelling natural beauty, but of rich historic memories. There is something in the very atmosphere that makes one sensible of the fact that he breathes an air laden with the fragrance of a bygone age before he has seen tangible earnest of the fact. Long before reaching Indian Town—with its frequent discovery of arrow heads, tomahawks, bits of pottery in a more or less excellent state of preservation, and the numerous ridges where once stood the wigwams of proud Indian chieftains—one's thoughts stray back to those stirring days of fierce struggle between the all-conquering white man and the savage aborigine; to a later period when stately mansions supplanted rude log-cabins, and the crude struggle for mere subsistence gave way to a life of luxury and ease; and when the "call to arms," which to preceding generations had been the signal to fight for one's hearth and home, for the preservation of life, now meant no more than to trip it gracefully, "on light, fantastic toe," across the gleaming ball-room floor with "milady," to the stately measures of the minuet.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Readbourne is on the Queen Anne's side of the Chester River and takes its name from George Read, the original owner, who received his grant in 1659. The exact size of the plantation is unknown but is supposed to have been in the neighbourhood of two thousand acres, and included several of the farms lying on either side of the river. In 1733, James Hollyday with his wife, Sarah Covington Lloyd (widow of Edward Lloyd of Wye House, and formerly the famous beauty, Sarah Covington) came to this estate from Talbot County, and here built the beautiful homestead which is the subject of this chapter.

The main part of the house is of English brick, and Hollyday, himself, is said to have gone to England to purchase the materials while his fair partner remained at home to superintend the building, which she had planned with the aid of the then Lord Baltimore, her husband's intimate friend. At the death of his father, James, the eldest son, a colonial lawyer and statesman of great eminence, inherited the home, but he died a bachelor and Readbourne went to his nephew, James, son of Henry Hollyday, at Ratcliffe, and Anna Maria Robins. This James married Susanna Tilghman, and the homestead passed in a direct line through their descendants to the late Richard Hollyday, the last of the family to live there. The present owner is Mr. John Perry, and Readbourne is now occupied by the Perrys as their summer home.

---

READBOURNE

---

The original building was colonial in design and finish, with large wainscoted halls and rooms. There have been various additions and alterations, but the main part has been substantially unchanged by the successive generations which have called it home. One of the chief beauties of the house is a gracefully winding stairway on which, no doubt, many a coquettish damosel lingered to waft a coveted kiss from her delicate finger-tips to some amorous swain below. There are about the place the foundations of many small buildings, probably kitchen, dairy, etc., which were connected with the main building. One of these ruins is known as the "Old Store" and, in all likelihood, was a storehouse for supplies ordered from England which, owing to infrequent opportunity, had to be imported in large quantities. The garden, like many another of its kind, is terraced down to the river. There are the remains of an old wall of English brick which enclosed the river-side lawn.

The family graveyard, as was the custom at that time, is in full sight of the house, where the quick might be ever conscious of the presence of the dead. This proximity of graveyard to dwelling house is a custom difficult to understand at this late date, but it was, none the less, a custom almost universally observed. The grave of the first Hollyday of Readbourne is marked with a large flat stone engraved with the family coat of arms and the following elaborate inscription:

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Here lies the body of Colonel James Hollyday, who departed this life, on the eighth day of October, 1747, aged 52 years.

"He was for many years one of His Lordship's Council, and in public and private life always supported the character of a worthy gentleman and a good Christian."

Readbourne was made famous by the lavish hospitality of its fair first mistress, and was the rendezvous for belles and beaux of the surrounding country. Judging from her portrait—now in the possession of Col. Henry Hollyday, Jr., of St. Aubin near Easton, Talbot County, Maryland—she was a woman of rare beauty, and one can readily credit the many tales that still obtain of her charm and fascinating personality.

In her will, probated in 1775, she disposed with great scrupulousness of a large estate, and the document contains frequent references to that antique institution, "a mourning ring."

"To my daughters-in-law, Anne Lloyd and Anna Maria Hollyday, to each of them, a Mourning Ring.

---

READBOURNE

---

"I give to my son-in-law, William Anderson, a Mourning Ring.

"For as much as my dear children Edward Lloyd, Richard Lloyd and Rebecca Anderson are settled in the world in good circumstances that it can not be thought that they stand in need of any assistance from me, I give to each of my said children a Mourning Ring. . . ."

This will is one of the records of Queen Anne's County, Maryland.

---

BELMONT

HOWARD COUNTY, MARYLAND

DORSEY—HANSON

---

BELMONT, the ancient stronghold of the Dorseys and Hansons, situated on a high hill commanding a view of twenty miles of open country on three sides, is about ten miles west of Baltimore as the crow flies, in the highlands of the Patapsco River, an exceedingly beautiful estuary of Chesapeake Bay, whose deep-valleyed, winding course was the path of many an early settler in Maryland to the back reaches of the province. Indeed, Belmont was built when the tide of settlement was still flowing from the water-crevices of Maryland to the hills in the west, and when hostile Indians were still to be encountered. Measured by the standards of the day in which it was erected, Belmont lies a day's journey by horseback north of Annapolis on the Elk Ridge post-road, and about half a day's journey to the east of that hustling, growing, shipping and fishing centre, "Baltemore Towne." Annapolis was just entering upon that period of commercial and social splendour which was to make it the "Athens of America," as its pre-revolutionary visitors affectionately dubbed it.

We, through the eyes of history, may look back and see, about the year 1730, one of those peculiar little surveying parties which went out from Annapolis repeatedly about this period in the history of Maryland to locate desirable stretches of land in the back country of the state not yet covered by patents, or otherwise encumbered. There is little to compare them to nowadays, except gold-seeking parties, only the former prospected for humble earth instead of regal metal; a difference in chemistry, that's all. This especial party was in charge of a certain Mordecai Moore, a surveyor of good reputation, and was to head north beyond Elk Ridge to the untouched parts of wild Baltimore County, now one of the most industrious farming sections of Maryland.

---

BELMONT

---

The configuration of the land in Maryland just north of Annapolis is rather peculiar and is historically of some little interest. For about twenty miles due north of the little capital it continues in a sort of spiny ridge even to-day thickly wooded, and then turns sharply (about where is the present-day thriving city of Laurel) to the east, to the valley of the Patapsco, the two sides of this angle being about equal in length. Because of the greater height of this land above its surroundings, it became a favourite place for home sites with the early settlers. From the abundance of a certain species of game to be found in its woods it gained the name of "Elk Ridge," so that eventually the little city which grew up at its Patapsco River terminus was known as "Elk Ridge Landing."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

There are few records of Mordecai Moore, surveyor, and he did not make a lasting imprint in the life of the colony. Yet he founded well for others to build upon. Our little surveying party under his direction was encamped one autumn morning on the heights above the Patapsco River when its leader arose early, before anyone else was astir. The mists were rising from the river, and the land sloped away from his feet to a generous horizon on three sides, while behind was a little hill which would protect one from the northwest winds. It was an ideal site for a home, and Mordecai Moore was not slow to realize this fact. "Here will I build me a house," he said to his soul; and, after he had wakened his companions and the sun had climbed up into the sky, he set himself to survey a tract of land which included more than ten thousand acres centring at the point whereon he had his camp. This tract he named in his patent papers, approved, in due course, by the proprietary, "Moore's morning choice." Here, not many years later, Belmont was erected, on the site of Moore's morning camp.

We do not find that our early morning surveyor long held on to the tract of land which his enterprise had gotten him. About the year 1735 he sold it to rich Caleb Dorsey, of Annapolis, by whom it was given to his son, Caleb, the large-hearted iron-maker of Maryland annals, who, in 1738, built thereon the beautiful home to which he took his young bride, Priscilla Hill, of West River.

BELMONT
1788

---

BELMONT

---

Over the doorway of Belmont to-day we may see a wooden tablet set in the stone bearing the initials, quaintly carved, "C. P. D." (which stand for "Caleb" and "Priscilla" (Hill) "Dorsey") and "1738," the date of the erection of the house.

This marriage of Caleb Dorsey's had a romantic basis. Like most men, young and old, of his day, Caleb was an ardent fox-hunter, and in this but followed his father who, at Hockley-in-the-Hole, often hallooed on the hounds. The foxes of that day were all red foxes, the grey variety not being abundant at any time in Maryland. One winter a grey fox appeared on Elk Ridge, having come from Canada, maybe. He received a greeting from the hard-living, open-air people of the neighbourhood, which would have satisfied the most captious animal, and was acclaimed the prize of the country-side. Strong men wrought through long days to kill him, and it became a point of honor with the people of the neighbourhood to see who should have the coveted trophy of his brush.

One day young Caleb Dorsey was out with his hounds, when he started this famous grey fox. The chase, though it had a happy conclusion from young Caleb's standpoint—being successful in its object—led him from early morning till late afternoon far down in a distant southerly part of the state of which he knew little. The marks of land around him he did not know, the trails were not familiar to him, and he was about to-make up his mind to a night in the woods, when down a little lane rode a beautiful young lady. She was about to ride by when she spied the grey fox brush on his saddle.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

"How may I get to 'Hockley' above Annapolis?" asked the youth.

"I don't know," replied the maid (so the story runs), "but if you keep down this lane for half a mile and turn to the left you will come to a house where they may direct you."

This was her own father's home and she knew, the story goes, that this fiery old gentleman would never let the boy go home that night until he had heard the whole story of the destruction of the fox. So it turned out. Old Mr. Hill no sooner saw the young man with the grey-fox tail than he immediately wished to hear all of the circumstances of the hunt.

"Go home to-night? Why no; impossible! It is too far; the trail is choked up. I would not think of letting you go home to-night!!! Boys" (turning to the house servants), "take this gentleman's horse and hounds to the stables. Do you see that brush he has?"

To tell the truth, so our chronicles run, young Dorsey was not unwilling to stay, and wished to continue his acquaintance with the fair lady of the lane. The evening was begun with tales of fox-hunting, and after this topic had been exhausted the old gentleman put a handkerchief over his face and went to sleep; when the latest gossip of Annapolis, the possibility of a theatre being opened in that metropolis, the routs, and the newest fashions, and such other subjects had the floor.

---

BELMONT

---

Caleb did not go home the next day, or the next, though he did finally leave after he had told that fox tale until even the old gentleman would not listen to it. Gossip began to say that he found a great many foxes in the neighbourhood of West River to hunt. "No," replied wise ones, "he is not hunting foxes there; he is hunting dear!" As we know, he was successful in the hunt. He secured "Moore's morning choice" from his father, built Belmont, took up his life there with the fair Priscilla, and became that solid man of affairs which he has been written in Maryland's history.

Caleb Dorsey inherited a large fortune from his father, but it was very greatly increased through his development of the iron ore resources in the neighbourhood of Belmont. With his brother, Edward, he built a foundry at Avalon, on the Patapsco, near his house, and the ruins of this foundry may still be seen at the little post-office station there which has taken its name from the mill. Farther south he built a second and larger foundry, which he called Hockley in honour of his boyhood home, and a third nearer Belmont.

The Patapsco River, upon which each of these mills depended for shipping its product, was more navigable in that day than it is now. The cutting of the forests, for one thing, has allowed the river to fill up so that, where a hundred years ago it supported a full-rigged schooner, it is to-day but a burbling shallows. Ships could then come up to the foot of the hill on which Belmont is situated, and here grew up the thriving little seaport town of Elkridge Landing.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

It is a strange story, this of the growth and fall of Elkridge Landing. There are still people in Elkridge Landing who can remember when ships could come up the river to its wharves, and when the river had an open channel ten feet deep from there to the bay. It was created a port of entry of the province, and not only carried away Caleb's iron manufactures, but tobacco in great quantities. The tobacco was rolled in casks by long strings of slaves down the old "Rolling Road," still in use from the northern part of the state. Next to Annapolis, it was one of the most important shipping points in the colony. With the filling up of the river, however, its glory departed and to-day it is a dreaming country village with high-pitched, old-time roofs, great chimneys that know now only a thin wisp of smoke, and houses with traditions of visits of Washington and Lafayette, with no hint of ships or things that "go down to the sea."

A delightful company filled old Belmont when it was young, and in those exciting times prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, many a stormy gathering was sheltered within its walls. The Dorseys were strong in the colonial cause, and many of the cannon used by

---

BELMONT

---

American troops against the British were cast at Caleb Dorsey's iron-works. Washington was a guest not infrequently at Belmont, and it is probable that the sage Benjamin Franklin was also, as we know that he visited Elkridge Landing.

The children of Caleb and Priscilla Hill Dorsey included three sons (Edward, Henry Hill and Samuel) and six daughters (Mary, Milcah, Rebecca, Priscilla, Peggy Hill and Elinor). Edward married his cousin, Elizabeth Dorsey, daughter of Col. John Dorsey and Mary Hammond, his wife, and was the inheritor of Belmont. Henry Hill married Eliza Goodwin; Samuel married Margaret Sprigg (in this line of descent is Mrs. Handy, of Richmond); Mary married Dr. Michael Pue (a descendant is W. Ventress Pue, of Texas); Milcah married William Goodwin; Rebecca married Captain Charles Ridgely, of Hampton; Priscilla married Charles Carnan Ridgely; Peggy Hill married William Buchanan; and Elinor died unmarried.

Edward Dorsey, next owner of Belmont, was popularly known as "Iron-head Ned." A strong-fisted, big-hearted man, he ran his father's mills in partnership with his brother Samuel. He had one son and three daughters. Hammond Dorsey married Elizabeth Pickering, of Massachusetts, and built a fine brick homestead, still to be seen, near the post-office of Relay. Mary married Daniel Murray, of Annapolis, whose sister, Annie Murray, became the wife of Gen. John

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Mason, of Virginia. Caroline married Johnston Donaldson; and Priscilla, who inherited Belmont, married Alexander Contee Hanson, whose descendants hold the old homestead.

The marriage of Priscilla Dorsey and Alexander Contee Hanson was an elopement. The girl was living with guardians in Baltimore, who would not give their consent to the match. With the temper inherited from her father aroused, she went to Annapolis with the man she loved and was there married. The elopement was not without its excitement, as the carriage in which the pair was making the trip broke a wheel pin. Had it not been for the extraordinary foresight of the prospective groom who had provided for just such a contingency, the marriage would inevitably have been postponed.

The children of Priscilla Dorsey and Alexander Contee Hanson were many, but only one lived to maturity, Charles Grosvenor Hanson, named for his paternal uncle, Charles Grosvenor, member of Congress from New York. He married Annie Maria Worthington, and had children: John Worthington Hanson, Murray Hanson, Grosvenor Hanson, Nannie Hanson, and Florence Hanson. These five constitute the present-day circle of this beautiful old home.

Belmont, like other colonial Maryland mansions, consists of a central building with wings. The centre building is traversed by a hallway running from front to back, and the wings are connected with the main body of the house. The downstairs rooms and the hall are beautifully panelled with oak from floor to ceiling, and so hard is this wood to-day that it resists all but the sturdiest saws, as carpenters have learned to their cost when they have had slight alterations to the house to effect. In the right wing is the kitchen; in the left wing is the ball-room, an octagonal apartment, generous in size, panelled in oak and with a large open fireplace. The second floor is occupied by sleeping rooms.

---

BELMONT

---

The entrance is a graceful Georgian portico. At the back of the house is a broad and comfortable veranda overlooking the old garden, of which there remains a box-hedge, believed to have been planted when the mansion was built, and now over twenty feet in height; such a Gargantuan box-hedge is rarely to be seen! The ground on which the house is placed is terraced, and the view from front or sides is still as delectable as when Mordecai Moore arose in the early morning and saw that the land whereon he had struck his camp was filled with beauty. About half a mile behind the house on the crest of a hill is the "God's half acre," where lie the bones of the successive generations that have been sheltered within Belmont's walls.

Alexander Contee Hanson, the first Hanson to live at Belmont, is a conspicuous figure in Maryland annals. Firm in his convictions, fluent in speech, of fine address and manner, he was the representative of his state for many years in the United States Senate. He was a friend of Henry Clay, who was often his guest at Belmont. Among the Belmont papers is a letter from Hanson to his wife, asking her to have six pairs of slippers for himself and guests, among whom was Clay, when they arrived from Washington. It was the custom for the men of that time to wear only great boots, and in the evening they wished to be comfortable and would put on as light gear as they could. The chair in which Clay loved to sit at Belmont is still kept in his favourite place before the fire, and the great table in the dining-room, around which he and other distinguished guests were wont to gather, is still in use and still maintains the same generous hospitality.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Sometimes, on dark, windy nights, in the old house you hear the Belmont ghost. At least once a winter does it come. You are sitting, let us say, before the open fire in which Clay delighted, you hear the wind lonesomely without, and suddenly there is the sound of horses' hoofs and jangling harness; many horses evidently, and the harness and wheels seem to creak and rumble more heavily than harness and wheels of nowadays. You start to the door, but you hear the rustle of other feet ahead of you on the same errand, though you see no one. The door opens, and there is the scraping of feet as people come in. You are now standing up in alarm.

"What is it?" you ask.

---

BELMONT

---

“ Oh, that is just some of the forefathers coming home from Annapolis in the coach and six.”

You hear the sound of wheels driving away around the house towards the stables, the creak of harness and clatter of hoofs. The rest is silence. This is the Belmont ghost.

The Hanson family is traced to Roger de Rastrick who, in 1251, was seated at Rastrick in the County of Halifax, England. The family name of to-day originated in 1330, when John de Rastrick of the seventh generation from the founder assumed the name Hanson, a diminutive of Henry's son, and signed himself John Hanson to a deed in 1337.

John Hanson, of London, of the fifteenth generation, while making a summer tour of Sweden fell in love with and married Margaret Vasa, granddaughter of Gustavus Vasa, and connection of the famous Gustavus Adolphus, of Sweden. He had a son who was reared by the latter, at a suitable age entered the army, served with credit, rose to the rank of colonel, and fell at Luetzen, November 16, 1632, with his sovereign, whom he was attempting to defend. This son left four children: Andrew, Randall or Randolph, William, and John, who were taken under the immediate protection of the royal family of Sweden, and in August, 1642, were sent to the New World in the care of Col. John Printz, Governor of New Sweden, on the Delaware. The family in this country has given many strong men, especially during the days which led up to, and concluded, the Revolution.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Of the four sons above mentioned, Andrew, the eldest, settled on Kent Island, Maryland, in 1653, and died there in 1655, leaving a wife and five children: Hans, Frederick, Katherine, Margaret, and a posthumous child, Barbara.

Randolph, the second of the four, was a bold and ambitious man, according to the chronicles of the day. He went to St. Mary's, the seat of the government of Maryland, to carve out his fortunes with his sword, and was a conspicuous figure in those troublous times. His daughter Barbara married Thomas Hatton, Gentleman, a grandnephew of Sir Christopher Hatton, of Hatton Hall, England, Lord High Chancellor of England and famous courtier of the circle of Queen Elizabeth.

William, the third son, accompanied Randolph to St. Mary's, but returned to Kent Island, where he died in 1684, leaving only his "loving wife Alice."

Colonel John, the youngest son, removed to Maryland in 1653, and, after a short sojourn on Kent Island, went to St. Mary's. Finally, about 1656, he settled in Charles County, where he lived until his death. In his will, dated December 12, 1713, he styles himself "a planter of Charles County," and mentions seven children, forming a lusty line of descent—Robert, Benjamin, Mary (the wife of the Rev. William Maconchie), Anne, Sarah, John, and Samuel.

ENTRANCE TO BELMONT

---

BELMONT

---

Of these, Robert had children: Samuel, William, Dorothy, Mary, Sarah, Violetta, and Benjamin. Dorothy married Richard Harrison. Mary married John Briscoe. Samuel became the father of John Hanson, progenitor of the branch of the family connected with Belmont, and of Samuel—revolutionary patriots both—Judge Walter, William, Elizabeth, Charity, Jane, and Chloe. Elizabeth married Benjamin Douglas, who was buried at Equality, an estate owned by his son-in-law, David Stone, a lineal descendant of William Stone, Governor of Maryland, 1649-1654.

John Hanson, son of Samuel, born in Charles County, Maryland, in 1715, was president of the Continental Congress, which assembled in Philadelphia during the Revolution, and is sometimes spoken of as the "first President of the United States," as his title was "President of the United States in Congress assembled." His statue has been placed by Maryland in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol at Washington, D. C., as one of her two sons whose names are most cherished. He married Jane Contee, and had children: Alexander Contee; Samuel, surgeon of Washington's Life Guards, killed while fighting at Fort Washington; Catherine Contee, who married Philip Alexander, of Virginia; Jane, who married John Thomas, of Maryland; and Elizabeth.

Alexander Contee Hanson was born in Annapolis, October 22, 1749. He was educated at the College of

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Philadelphia, studied law in Annapolis, and started for England to be ordained for the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but was wrecked, rescued and taken to Philadelphia, where he became assistant private secretary to General Washington, his first cousin (Robert Hanson Harrison, of Virginia) being chief secretary. After two months in this post, his health forsook him, and he was obliged to resign. He visited Washington at headquarters just after the battle of Brandywine, and was present when the two armies were separated by a violent shower of rain. He accompanied Washington to a farmhouse, and, being still in poor health, was obliged to accept Washington's offer of his bed for the night. Alexander Hamilton curled up in one corner of the room on the floor, and afterwards Hanson would good-naturedly remark that he "never saw a man look so much like a cat." In 1784, he was appointed with Samuel Chase to digest the laws of Maryland from 1763, and this work, a monument to his memory, is known as "Hanson's Laws." He was a delegate in 1788 to the convention which ratified the federal constitution, and declined a federal judgeship to become Chancellor of Maryland. He married Rebecca Howard of Annapolis, and left children: Charles Wallace, who married Rebecca Ridgely, eldest daughter of Governor Charles Ridgely, of Hampton, and had no issue; Alexander Contee, who married Priscilla Dorsey, of Belmont; and Mary Jane, who married

---

BELMONT

---

Peabody Grosvenor, Member of Congress from New York.

Alexander Contee Hanson, Jr., was born at his father's home in Annapolis, February 27, 1786. He was educated at St. John's College, Annapolis, at that time under the direction of John McDowell, who became provost of the University of Pennsylvania, and while yet in his sixteenth year had gone through all of the branches taught at his school except French, for which he conceived an aversion he never overcame, owing to the shocking deeds done by the Jacobins of France as recorded in the "Bloody Buoy," compiled and published by William Cobbett, bookseller of Philadelphia, and other like tracts of that period. He became a contributor to the press of the day, and at length edited the Federal Republican, of Baltimore, in which he denounced the federal administration. Violent strictures of those in authority not being so amiably received by the populace of that time as this, the people of the city sacked his printing plant. After a temporary suspension, the journal was reissued, July 27, 1812, simultaneously in Baltimore and Georgetown, D. C. This led to another attack upon the newspaper office on July 28, 1812, and an armed collision between those who defended the establishment and those who attacked it. Mr. Hanson and his friends surrendered to the city authorities under promise of protection. The murderous attack by the mob on the jail in which they were confined is a matter of Baltimore history. Mr. Hanson was left for dead, but recovered after a painful illness. In 1813 he was elected to Congress, where he served from May 24 of that year to January 2, 1817, when he took his seat in the Senate in place of Robert Goodloe Harper, resigned. He was returned for the next term, and was a senator until his death, at Belmont, May 23, 1819. He was a man of many friendships and entertained lavishly. His runaway marriage with Priscilla Dorsey has already been recounted.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Jane Contee Hanson (daughter of John, the president of the Continental Congress, and Jane Contee) married Dr. Philip Thomas, delegate from Frederick County to the Maryland convention of 1774. Their son, John Hanson Thomas, born in Frederick, 1779, died 1815, married (October 5, 1809) at Honeywood, Berkeley County, Virginia, Mary Isham Colston, a descendant of William Brewster, who came over in the Mayflower with the Plymouth colony in 1620, and was the first elder of that settlement. She was, also, a descendant of Henry Isham, of England, colonist to Virginia in 1675. Their son, John Hanson Thomas the second, of Frederick, Maryland, born in 1813, died in 1881, married Annie Campbell Gordon, of Virginia. Of this union came Mr. Douglas Hamilton Thomas, of Baltimore, who married Alice Lee Whitridge, Basil Gordon Thomas, John Hanson Thomas the third, Raleigh Colston Thomas, Nannie Gordon Thomas, Mary Randolph Thomas, and John Marshall Thomas (whose son is John Gregg Thomas, and whose daughter is Natalie Contee Thomas).

---

BELMONT

---

Of the marriage of Douglas Hamilton Thomas and Alice Lee Whitridge was born Douglas N. Thomas, of Baltimore, who married Bessie Chadwick; John Hanson Thomas, of Baltimore; and Alice Lee Thomas.

Samuel Hanson, brother of John Hanson, the revolutionary patriot, had the following children: Samuel, who married May Kay, daughter of John and Elizabeth Kay, of New Jersey; John Contee; Capt. Thomas Hawkins, who married Rebecca, daughter of Walter and Mary Grafton Dulany; Sarah, who married Dr. William Beane, of Upper Marlboro; Elizabeth, who married Addison; Eleanor, who married General Chapman; Mildred, who married Dr. William Baker; Chloe, who married Gen. George Lee, son of Governor Thomas Sim Lee and nephew of Richard Henry Lee, the signer; Anne, who married Nicholas Lingan, brother of Gen. James Maccubbin Lingan.

Of the union of Samuel the third and May Kay came Samuel the fourth, who settled in Kentucky and was the father of Gen. Roger Weightman Hanson, who fell mortally wounded at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and the Honourable Richard Hickman Hanson, of Paris, Kentucky; Isaac Kay, who married Maria Storer; Maria, who married Daniel Sheffy; Louisa Serena, who married Gen. Roger Chew Weightman.

---

MOUNT AIRY

CROOME, PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

CALVERT—DUVALL

---

IN a grove of great oaks in southern Maryland is a royal old homestead deep in colourful memories of the past. This is Mount Airy, the Calvert mansion, near Croome, Prince George's County, Maryland, the seat of the descendants of Lord Baltimore in the United States. A popular picnic point for automobile parties from Washington now, the place has sheltered many notable people and has been the scene of many a brilliant social gathering. Here Washington's stepson, George Parke Custis, found his bride, Eleanor Calvert, and lived out the brief span of his life. Here, too, Washington was a frequent visitor even before the Revolution—it is not a long day's journey from Mount Vernon.

Standing before the door of the old home, we can imagine the great coaches of our great-grandfathers, requiring four or six horses to move them—and uncomfortable then—lumbering up through the long aisle of high trees and discharging their polite and elegant freight; for Mount Airy was a centre of hospitality of the old Maryland order where a guest came at his will and stayed for a day, or weeks, as he chose. What an alluring gossip of picturesque figures might the house chat in its old man's tone if it could!

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

In the halls of the old home the romantic figure of Eleanor Calvert, the bride of young Custis, can be pictured. She was a great horsewoman, and frequently hunted over the country-side. Glimpses of her beauty have been preserved in miniatures and in an old painting which, until a few years ago, hung at Mount Airy. During Washington's occupancy of the White House she was a frequent visitor, and there is a painting of Mrs. Washington in which Eleanor is shown, a beautiful figure, to the elder woman's right.

We may not see her young husband so clearly through the mists of time. A delicate gentleman, he lived only five years after his marriage, and died at the age of twenty-eight years, leaving four children. He was married February 3, 1774, in the parlour of Mount Airy. A glimpse of him we have in the following letter written by Washington to the boy's tutor: "I will allow you an extra sixty dollars for your pains with Parke. I want you to be good to him for he is a most promising lad, the last of his family, and will have a large fortune at maturity. I wish to make him a useful man." He was buried in the family lot at Mount Airy.

Eleanor was married a second time to Dr. David Stuart, of Virginia, and went to this sister state of Maryland to live, thus passing from our scene.

Of the builder of Mount Airy we do not know very much. At his death he was described in the following terms in the Maryland Journal and Advertiser, January 15, 1788: "A gentleman whose Benevolence of Heart and many other exalted Virtues justly endeared him to his Relations and a numerous and respectable Acquaintance, who have sustained an irreparable loss by his death."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

There is mystery concerning a great part of Benedict Calvert's life. That he was a son of Charles Calvert, fifth Lord Baltimore, is well known, but who his mother was, or where he was born, has never been recorded. As a young man he was sent to Annapolis to the home of Dr. George Steuart, of that city, with a tutor, Onorio Razolini. We find him addressed by his father in the following fashion in a letter, dated February 7, 1745:

DEAR CHILD:

You will by this Opportunity receive Duplicates of a Commission with the proper Instructions from ye proper Offices Appointing you Collector of Patuxent in ye Room of Rousby, deceased, and I make no doubt but you will do Your Utmost to Execute it to the Utmost of your Power, and I must desire you will get ye most able to Aid and Assist you, and I hope you will Endeavor to get Mr. Jennings to help you and that You'll give him such Encouragement as may make it worth his while.

I desire you will Consult with Mr. Bladen and Mr. Tasker. I shall Omit no Opportunity of doing all in my Power to show how much I am

Your Affectionate

Father,

BALTIMORE.

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

Somewhat later we find that His Lordship writes:

“Pray do not think of Marrying till you hear from me having some things to Propose to you, much for your Advantage, and believe me I will never force Your Inclination, Only Propose what I think will make you most Happy, Afterwards Leave it to Your own Determination.”

That a wife was chosen to suit the lordly, far-away parent, is shown by a letter from him in 1748 to Razolini, the tutor, expressing approval of his son's intended venture upon matrimony. About the same time he wrote to the young man himself, telling him to take in charge certain lands on the Patuxent which he designed for him. On April 21 of that year, Benedict was married to Elizabeth Calvert, his distant cousin, daughter of Charles Calvert, Governor of Maryland from 1720 to 1727. The ceremony was performed by the Reverend John Gordon, rector of St. Anne's Parish, Annapolis, in the presence of Mr. Onorio Razolini, Mrs. Elizabeth Razolini and Miss Ariana Brice, and is thus recorded in the Maryland Gazette for April 27, 1748: “Last Thursday the Honourable Benedict Calvert, Esq., Collector of His Majesty's customs for Patuxent District, etc., was married to Miss Elizabeth Calvert, only surviving Daughter of the late Honourable Charles Calvert, Esq., deceased, former Governor of this province.”

Before his marriage, young Calvert had entered upon his duties as collector of the Port of Patuxent and had taken up his residence upon the lands on that river given to him by his father. It was not until three years after his marriage that he acquired full title to the Mount Airy property, and then it was by transfer through an intermediary, Ignatius Digges, Esq., as is witnessed by the following deed, one of the records of the Provincial Court for the Western Shore, in the Land Record office at Annapolis:

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

This indenture made the third day of June, 1751, between Ignatius Digges, of Prince George's County, in the Province of Maryland, Gentleman, of the one part and Benedict Calvert of the City of Annapolis and Province aforesaid of the other part. Whereas, by indentures of lease and release bearing date respectively on or about the Seventeenth and Eighteenth days of February, 1745, made between Samuel Hyde, late of London, Merchant by the name of Samuel Hyde of Rood Lane, London, Merchant, of the one part and Charles, Lord Baltimore, of the other part, he the said Samuel Hyde did grant and confirm unto him the said Charles, Lord Baltimore, all that Plantation called "His Lordship's Kindness" containing by estimation Six Thousand, Seven Hundred acres of land, and also all that other Plantation called and known by the name of the several tracts containing by Estimation, Two thousand Five hundred Acres,—unto the said Charles, Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, forever. And whereas, the aforesaid two tracts of land were on the twenty-ninth day of June, 1750, by the direction of the said Charles, Lord Baltimore, sett up to Publick Vendue by Auction at which sale the said Ignatius Digges was the highest bidder at Seven Hundred and Sixty Pounds, Sterling, for the first mentioned tract and at Seven Hundred and Ten Pounds, Sterling, for the last mentioned tract. Now this indenture Witnesseth that the said Ignatius Digges in consideration of One

MOUNT AIRY
1761

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

Thousand, Four Hundred and Seventy Pounds (being the total of the aforesaid sums of money) Doth grant and confirm unto the said Benedict Calvert all those above-mentioned Plantations, all which premises are in Prince George's County on a River called Patuxen, in the Proprietary of Maryland, on the continent of America, and are part of certain Land and Premises released and conveyed by Henry Darnall, late of Prince George's County in Maryland aforesaid, to John Hyde, deceased, the father of a certain Samuel Hyde, late of London, Merchant, deceased, together with all Messuages etc., unto him the said Benedict Calvert, his heirs and assigns forever.

In witness whereof the partys to these presents have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Signed and sealed in the presence of Chas. Hammond and Sam. Chamberlaine.

In 1751, Benedict Calvert commenced to build Mount Airy and completed it without interruption. Here he lived until his death in 1788. He was buried under the chancel of St. Thomas' Church, Croome, Prince George's County, which he had helped to found and support. Ten years later he was followed to the grave by his wife. At the outbreak of the Revolution, he had given up his post of Collector of Customs of Patuxent, and his latter years were years of leisure.

At the death of its builder, Mount Airy was left to his wife, on her death to go to the oldest living son, Edward Henry, born November 7, 1766, married March 1, 1796, and died July 12, 1846. Edward Henry (Calvert) left the estate to his widow, who died March

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

26, 1857, and by her will the property, now shrunk to about a thousand acres, was to be divided among her children. Two of these children, however, Cecilius Baltimore and Eleanora Adela, bought out the interest of all of the other children, and made it their home until they died; the former, March 13, 1901, and the latter, July 15, 1902, aged ninety-five and eighty-one years, respectively. These were the last Calvert owners. After the death of "old Miss Eleanor" the home and furnishings were sold at auction, the house being purchased February, 1903, by Mrs. Tillie R. Duvall, its present occupant. The property was described in the auctioneer's catalogue in the following terms:

This beautiful old place now contains about eight hundred and twenty acres of fine grazing, or farming land, well watered by natural springs, having a beautiful lake containing about ten acres, well stocked with fish. About two hundred acres of the land is covered with a natural growth of old oaks and other choice varieties of native trees.

Death in a tragic shape was the portion of the last of the Calverts of Mount Airy. Miss Eleanor Calvert was accustomed to use an old-fashioned oil lamp, which her relatives warned her was not safe. One night it turned over in her hand as she was descending the steps, spilled oil over her clothing and set it ablaze. The old lady died from the injuries. She was beloved and respected by her neighbours, and was very fond of children. During her later years she kept the old house full of little ones—her nieces, nephews, great-nieces, great-nephews and little cousins, even to the third and fourth generation.

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

Six years after the marriage of Eleanor Calvert to George Parke Custis, another brilliant wedding took place in the little parlour of Mount Airy. It was that of Elizabeth, a younger daughter, who was wed, June 15, 1780, to Dr. Charles Steuart, of Annapolis, son of that Dr. George Steuart in whose home Benedict Calvert lived. In Mount Airy, too, was celebrated Eleanor's second marriage.

The children of Benedict Calvert, the founder, and his wife Elizabeth, were: Rebecca, who died in infancy; Eleanor, who married first, February 3, 1774, George Parke Custis, stepson of George Washington, second, 1783, Dr. David Stuart, of Virginia; Charles, who remained unmarried; Elizabeth, who married, June 15, 1780, Dr. Charles Steuart, of Annapolis, Maryland; Edward Henry, who married, March 1, 1796, Elizabeth Biscoe, daughter of George and Araminta Carroll Biscoe; George, who married, June 11, 1799, Rosalie Eugenia Stier, daughter of Henri Joseph and Marie Louise Stier, of Antwerp, Belgium; Philip, Leonard, Cecilius, Robert, John, William, and Ariana. Of this last seven, the first four died in youth; the last three did not marry.

The tragedy of Ariana Calvert's life is one of the most pathetic stories connected with the historic old mansion. She loved a young man who had been received at her father's house, but was not looked upon with favour as the daughter's prospective husband. Trusting to time to soften her father's heart, she waited patiently, and the father, on his part, tried by every indulgence to turn the thoughts of his daughter from her lover. She was sent to Annapolis for a visit and in the company of her brilliant sisters to every fête in town and country. Many suitors pressed their claims for her hand but for all she had a gentle refusal. She began to fade and droop and her health broke down. Her father died and her mother, seeing that her child was facing death, gave her consent to the engagement. But it was too late. The fine spirit had been tried too long, and death bore it away.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The issue of George Parke Custis and Eleanor Calvert (the first wedding in the Calvert house) was: Eliza Parke, born August 21, 1776, married, March 20, 1796, to Thomas Law, secretary to Warren Hastings in India, and has descendants—Martha, born December 31, 1777, who married, January 6, 1795, Thomas Peter a wealthy merchant of Georgetown, D. C., and has descendants, many of them in Washington; Eleanor Parke, born March 21, 1779, who married, February 22, 1799, Major Lawrence Lewis, and has descendants; George Washington Parke, born April 30, 1781, who married Mary Fitzhugh, of Arlington, Virginia, whose daughter, Mary Randolph Custis Parke, born October 1, 1806, married,

RIVERDALE
Built by George Calvert, in 1802

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

June 30, 1831, Robert E. Lee, commander-in-chief of the armies of the Confederacy.

By her marriage to Dr. Stuart, Eleanor had seven children, four of whom married, leaving a large descent.

George Calvert, the only other son of Benedict to have issue, built, in 1802, another beautiful homestead at Riverdale, Maryland, about sixteen miles north of Croome, more magnificent in size and decoration than Mount Airy; and this place, which is more accessible by rail to visitors than the older homestead, is often mistaken for that other dwelling house. His children were: Caroline Maria, born July 15, 1800, who married Thomas Willing Morris, of Philadelphia; George Henry, born January 2, 1803, who married, May, 1821, Elizabeth Steuart, and died without issue, May 24, 1889; Marie Louise Calvert; Rosalie Eugenia, born October 19, 1806, who married Charles Henry Corter; Charles Benedict, born August 23, 1808, who married Charlotte Augusta Norris; Henry Albert; Marie Louise, Julie, born January 31, 1814, who married Dr. Richard Henry Stuart; Amelia Isabelle. The homestead at Riverdale remained in the family until December 5, 1904, when it, too, was sold at auction, the purchaser being its present occupant, W. T. Pickford, a prominent business man of Washington.

The children of Edward Henry Calvert and Elizabeth Biscoe, his wife, forming the last generation of Calverts at Mount Airy, were: Benedict; George, who married Sarah E. Hungerford; Edward Henry, who married Mary Powell; Charles Frederick; Washington Custis, who married, first, Sophia O. Mulliken, second, Elizabeth S. Randolph; Cecelius Baltimore; John, who married Julia Stockton Rush; Elizabeth; William B., who married Mary Harriet Hughes; Araminta; Octavius Augustus; Juliana; Eleanora Adela. John Calvert had two children: John Calvert, of Philadelphia, whose son is Cecelius Baltimore Calvert, of Philadelphia, and Madison Rush Calvert. Roberta Lee Calvert, the youngest daughter of George, married T. C. Judkins, and lives in San Francisco. She has a son, Robert Calvert Judkins.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Interesting recollections of Mount Airy have been written by Mrs. Eleanora Calvert Wilson, daughter of William Calvert, and who spent her childhood at the old place.

My father, William, the youngest of these nine sons, was the first to bring his young bride, according to the custom of the day, to this old house, and here my sister and I were born, and still another generation of little girls chased the butterflies from flower to flower, hunted the birds in their nests, and the woods sent back the echoes of merry prattle and joyous song once more. We were not so decorous and well disciplined, I fear, as the former generations of little people had been, for we had so many indulgent uncles to spoil us.

Hand in hand they would walk with us through the orchard every morning gathering for us the choicest fruits, such delicious peaches, grapes, pears and great, red-cheeked apples!

How well I remember old "Aunt Polly," the octogenarian

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

negress who had nursed or assisted in the nursing of these other little girls, often reducing us to order by saying:

"My little misses never did so; they were little ladies."

"So are we, Aunt Polly," we would indignantly reply.

"Then you must behave like them," was always Aunt Polly's strong argument. She was at that time too old for actual service, so with a silk cloth in her hand she passed from room to room removing any dust that had settled upon the handsome mahogany furniture. Occasionally, Aunt Polly would doze and mechanically rub one spot for a long time. Coming upon her sometimes at these moments we would mischievously startle her by asking, "Why, Aunt Polly, what are you doing?" Recovering her consciousness quickly she would put additional force into her labour and answer with great placidity, "Just a little fine polishing, Honey."

Sometimes we would quietly slip the cloth from her hand and conceal it before awakening her and enjoy her look of amazement when she couldn't find it. "Oh, Aunt Polly, you were asleep that time," we would say. "Well, Honey, I do think I must have been," she would reply with one of her placid smiles.

My grandmother would have liked to have her remain in her quarters, and would have cared for her, but poor old Aunt Polly was so afraid of being considered "old and worthless" that she would not consent to it.

Old Neale, too, the coachman, could not tolerate the idea of having to give place to a younger man. "Why, I 'members the day when that boy was born," he said indignantly. Grandfather tried to comfort him by telling him that the new coachman would never be quite so fine as he had been. At this the old man straightened himself up in spite of his bent shoulders and a smile passed over his face as he said, "Well, Massa, there is sumpin' in dat."

By her marriage to Charles Steuart, Elizabeth Cal-

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

vert, daughter of Benedict, had issue: George Calvert; Benedict; Edward Henry, who married Mary Wilcox; and Dr. Charles (Steuart) who married Ann Fitzhugh Biscoe, and a descendant of whom in Baltimore is Mr. Richard D. Steuart.

Perhaps it is the ghosts of the ancients whom we have considered that trouble Mount Airy to-day, for ghosts there are, the present owner will tell you. There is the time when with her husband Mrs. Duvall drove back from Washington, one dark night, and found a solitary horseman in the garb of a hundred years ago calmly sitting his horse in front of the door, at the end of the long aisle of trees. By the dim light of the stars they saw him inspecting them with a gaze, as if to say "What do you here?" and then he vanished. Again Mrs. Duvall has been awakened in the night by a ghostly woman's figure, which one midnight put its cold hands around her throat. There is a room above the dining-room in which no lamp will burn, the strongest, most ingeniously constructed lamp going out meekly the moment you cross the threshold with it. Doors open and shut without cause. Beds sag and creak with no human being on them.

Many of the colonial mansions of Maryland are larger than Mount Airy, many of them have more elaborate ornamentation, for this place has neither size nor elaboration to commend it, yet few have its charm. Its chief feature is a wing, considerably older than the

FIREPLACE IN DINING-ROOM

THE SIDEBOARD

IMPRESSIONS OF MOUNT AIRY

---

MOUNT AIRY

---

body of the house—used as a hunting lodge by one of the early Lords Baltimore, tradition tells us—a long, low structure with dormer windows and a hip-roof, made of immense old English brick laid all with the ends out, the walls being nearly two feet thick. From the centre rear of this the main part of the house takes its departure. This main portion is simply a two-story edifice with two large pillars in front which support a gallery. It contains merely a hall, staircase and two rooms at the end opposite the wing. A cellar runs beneath the main building connecting with the more ancient cellar beneath the old hunting lodge or wing. In the former is a wine vault with high, arched ceiling; in the latter, an entrance to a secret passageway, which has not been explored in the memory of man. This passageway leads through the old foundation walls, five feet thick, to a point of exit, it is believed, near the old bowling green. The main body of the house is of brick covered with plaster; the wing is of brick exposed.

The approach to the old mansion is one of its greatest charms. The road leads straight from the gate about two hundred yards through an avenue of overarching old linden trees to a circle of box, immediately in front of the more modern portion of the house. To the right, lies a garden designed by Major L'Enfant, the designer of the plan for the city of Washington. Just a few steps from here, on a terrace overlooked by, and fronting on, the wing of the house, is the old bowling green, now a tennis court. There is more terracing in other parts of the grounds, and Major L'Enfant's garden containing many rare shrubs and flowers, is even to-day a very beautiful retreat.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

When Mount Airy was sold in 1903, the many treasures which it contained were sold at an auction room in Washington. Among other things disposed of were a portrait supposed to be by Van Dyke, of Charles, fifth Lord Baltimore, in armour; a portrait of Benedict Leonard Calvert, fourth Lord Baltimore, who married Lady Charlotte Lee, granddaughter of King Charles II; a portrait of Benedict Calvert; a portrait of Eleanor Calvert in riding habit; other paintings; a set of silver, consisting of one coffee pot, two mugs, a set of casters and two small waiters, all bearing coat-of-arms and crest, and sent to Benedict by his father as a wedding present; and many other things of smaller value.

The present owner of Mount Airy, Mrs. Tillie R. Duvall, is an artist and musician by training, and is known to many in these arts. She was married in 1908, about five years after she had moved into the place, to Percy M. Duvall, of Croome, Prince George's County. One child, a girl, has blessed this union. The Duvalls have open house, and many friends from nearby Washington keep them from getting lonesome with the ghosts and solitudes of the old home.

---

BELAIR

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

OGLE—BOWIE—WOODWARD

---

HE most magnificently maintained survival of the Georgian era of building in Maryland is unquestionably Belair, the old Ogle estate, now the occasional home of William Woodward, Esq., of New York City. Its present owner spares no pains to preserve the flavour of the olden time which clings around the beautiful structure and, at the same time, has so added to the building and grounds that the place is one of the most splendid in Maryland. It is situated in Prince George's County, not far from Bowie Station, a point on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The house is situated on the crest of a hill, as were most of the mansions of the colonial period in Maryland, and commands a wide view. However hot and still the day may seem in the countryside around there is always a breeze stirring in its wide halls. As it stands to-day, it consists of a central building with wings, but the wings are a latter addition by its present-day owner, though in such perfect harmony with the rest of the building have they been fashioned that one needs must be told this fact to believe it. The grounds around the house are terraced and from the main doorway extends a mile-long aisle of great trees, memorials of an early day, indeed.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

This approach to the front of the house Mr. Woodward has improved by an extension which carries it for a mile or more farther through his estate, so that now one drives for nearly two miles from the entrance to the place over a finely ballasted and smoothly topped roadway before one at last swings into the long, straight stretch between mammoth trees which leads to the old mansion itself.

The front and rear doorways of the house are simple but graceful, and the interior woodwork, while not elaborate, is beautified with carving. The stairway extends to the left from the front door and leads to a cool and well-disposed second floor. The outlook from the rear of the house is very fine, leading the eye over the old bowling green and the green terraces which lend dignity to this side of the house.

Belair belonged in the early part of the eighteenth century to Hon. Benjamin Tasker, who was one of the most important men in the then Province of Maryland. His daughter Anne, at the age of eighteen, married Governor Samuel Ogle, a captain of cavalry in His British Majesty's service, who had received from the Lord Proprietary a commission as Governor of Maryland, dated September 16, 1731. Belair was given to Governor Ogle and his bride by Benjamin Tasker, and

CENTRAL PORTION OF BELAIR

Built in 1741

---

BELAIR

---

there the Ogles lived in princely style, their town house at Annapolis claiming their presence only during the social season. The estate then consisted of 3,600 acres. The mansion was spacious and elaborate for those days. It is said that six hundred acres were thrown into a park, and fallow deer were seen about the woodland. Belair had its race track, its kennels, and life was planned in every particular on the basis of the gentry of England. The Ogles lived as befitted their station, and drove to and from Annapolis, a distance of about twenty miles, with four-in-hand and liveried outriders, as has been noted from letters still in existence. Such was the early condition of the plantation, and it must have remained much the same during the next century as is evidenced by the condition of the house and grounds, and especially the long avenue of tulip trees immediately in front of the house which constantly added to the beauty and dignity of the landscape. Originally there must have been ninety-six of these trees planted on a straight avenue of five hundred yards leading to the house, in four parallel rows, making two turf-covered lanes over which the rider (and a very occasional vehicle) would approach. There are thirty-two of these now giant tulips remaining, one of the larger ones measuring over twenty feet in circumference, and with a height of more than ninety feet.

A part of Belair in the late seventies fell to the ownership of Governor Bowie, of Maryland, and finally to his sons, and some partition had by that time been made, when in the later years of the last century Mr. James T. Woodward, of New York and Maryland, purchased the estate and added to and improved it, as has also his nephew, William Woodward, who inherited it from him and now owns it. The Woodward's are from Anne Arundel County, but James T. Woodward's mother was a Magruder, of Prince George's County, and a substantial portion of what is now comprised in Belair is old Magruder land.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Belair has to-day its own pack of hounds, and thoroughbred colts are seen grazing on its meadows.

Among the many distinguished men of Maryland none were of more distinguished lineage than Samuel Ogle, builder of Belair. The family was of old Saxon stock. This member of it received from the Lord Proprietary his commission as governor of the province of Maryland in September, 1731, and took oath of office in Annapolis in December of that same year. In 1741 he married Anne Tasker, who was but a child of nine years when he arrived in this country. Though there was this great disparity of age between Ogle and his wife, the marriage was, none the less, a happy one. Two of Anne Tasker's sisters, Elizabeth and Frances, married, respectively, Christopher Lowndes, forebear of the late Governor Lloyd Lowndes, of Maryland, and

BELAIR, FROM THE TERRACE

MAIN STAIRWAY, BELAIR

---

BELAIR

---

Robert Carter, of Nominy Hall, Virginia. Her maternal uncle was that Thomas Bladen who was Governor of Maryland from 1742 to 1747 and of whose daughter Lord Chesterfield wrote as follows in a letter to his son: "Our friend, Harriet Bladen, with a fortune of 20,000 Pounds, is to be married to the Earl of Essex."

Benjamin Ogle, son of Samuel Ogle, became Governor of Maryland in 1809, and his son of the same name was the last Ogle to live at Belair.

Belair was the country home of Samuel Ogle and his Bladen bride. The town house in which they had their entertainments during "the season" is that quaint little old structure in Annapolis which stands at the corner of College Avenue and King George Street and is familiarly known in the ancient city as the Ogle House. A beautiful box-bordered walk and an arched doorway which no passerby fails to admire are almost all that remain of its one-time glories, yet its gardens were once very beautiful and its presence is always dignified by the flavour of the names with which it has been associated. Here, moreover, in 1840, Governor Benjamin Ogle, son of Samuel, died.

So great a lover of horses was Samuel Ogle that he built his stables in Annapolis beside the front walk of his house, so that he might always stop and see the animals upon which he lavished so much affection whenever he left or entered his home. He also imported from

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

England the celebrated horse, "Spark," a gift from Lord Baltimore, to whom the horse had been presented by Prince Frederick, father of George III, of England. This stable has long since been torn down, but its existence will probably never be forgotten by those who know the traditions of Annapolis. The Ogle House is now a boarding-house for officers of the navy who are stationed at the Naval Academy hard at hand, and is part of the estate of the late Rear-Admiral Porter, U. S. N., retired.

---

BLAKEFORD

QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

DE COURCY—BLAKE—WRIGHT—THOM

---

BLAKEFORD, the old De Courcy homestead, is situated on Queenstown Creek, an estuary of the Chester River, Queen Anne's County, Maryland, and is notable for its antiquity, the dignity of its interior and its beautiful gardens which have attracted sightseers from sleepy little Queenstown—across Queenstown Harbour from the old mansion—for many generations.

The approach to the house is by a finely planned drive which leads through a magnificent stretch of woodland trees. This forest has been used by the Maryland Forestry Board as an example of a perfectly tended woods. One passes beyond these trees and comes to another ancient grove. Here is situated Blakeford.

Blakeford has a charming outlook over the waters of the Chester River, which in the early days was its means of communication with the rest of the world. The house faces the river which runs northwest here, and is one of the largest homesteads on the eastern shore of Maryland. It consists of a main structure and a wing. The walls are of masonry covered with clap-boards, and the whole construction of the house is one of great substantiality.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The interior of the mansion is very delightful. It is divided through the middle by a hallway which connects with another hall extending to the side of the house, which has no wing, so even on the hottest day there is an air stirring in Blakeford when the three outer doors are open. The dining-room is heavily panelled and the main hall contains arches, yet the whole character of the interior of the house is very simple and without elaboration of detail.

The gardens of Blakeford extend upon two sides of the grounds surrounding the house, and contain many rare shrubs and flowers, making the place at all seasons a veritable bower of delight. They contain, in addition, an all-the-year-round summer-house, a very ingenious sort of erection which is unique in Maryland, and probably in the rest of the United States as well. It consists simply of two intersecting brick walls set at right angles to each other, so that no matter at what position of the sky the sun may be in, no matter what hour of the day, there is always a side of the summer-house which is in shade. The brick walls of which it is constructed have had vines trained over them and have comfortable benches built into them at their bases.

The De Courcy (or Coursey) family has been identified with the history of Maryland since the very earliest days of the colony. In 1654, for instance, we find that one "Henry Coursey, Clark" examined certain papers concerning William Claiborne who, with Richard

ALL-THE-YEAR-'ROUND SUMMER HOUSE

FROM THE EAST

BLAKEFORD

---

BLAKEFORD

---

Bennett, was appointed by Parliament in 1651 Commissioner "for the reducing of Virginia and Maryland to their due obedience to the Commonwealth of England." This "Henry Coursey, Clark" was a man of great prominence in the province, was chief judge of Kent County, and covered himself with glory on the field of battle and in the councils of state. In his transactions with the Five Nations at a congress in Albany, New York—1677—his conduct was so creditable as to elicit the commendation of the Governor and Assembly.

Henry Coursey lived at "My Lord's Gift," on the opposite side of Queenstown Creek from Blakeford. It is said that, in recognition of the distinguished services he had rendered the government, particularly in connection with a treaty he had recently made with the Iroquois Indians, the Governor offered him as much land as he could cover with his thumb on the map of the province spread before him. According to the story, Col. Henry Coursey placed a blunt thumb at a point on Queenstown Creek and rolled it over, thus describing an imprint, representing some sixteen hundred acres. Hence the name, "My Lord's Gift."

These two homesteads were taken up at practically the same time—more than two and a half centuries ago—My Lord's Gift, as we have seen, by Henry Coursey; Blakeford by his brother William. The name of the original patent for Blakeford was "Coursey's Neck." Major William Coursey, the patentee, in time sold to a Mr. Blake, who had the place resurveyed and added thereto two tracts, Long Run and White Banks. The three combined were known as "Blake's Fort," so called from the old fort at the southwestern end of the place on the Chester River. This name in time became Blakeford, the change being facilitated, no doubt, by the fact that there was a ford across Queenstown Creek, or Coursey's Creek as it was then known, used as a means of communication between the two Coursey estates.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The old place remained away from the family of its founder for two generations until through the marriage of Mary Tidmarsh De Courcy—grand-niece of Col. Henry Coursey, Major William Coursey, patentee of Coursey's Neck, and granddaughter of Col. Henry Coursey, patentee of My Lord's Gift—to Judge Solomon Wright, of another distinguished Maryland family, who purchased Blakeford from the Blake heirs, it came to its own again.

Judge Wright was a member of the Maryland Convention of 1771-1776; member of the Assembly, 1771-73-74; member of the Association of Freemen; Judge of the Provincial Court; special Judge for the Eastern Shore during the Revolution, etc., etc. He was appointed judge of the first Court of Appeals of Maryland, upon the formation of the state, and served in this capacity until his death in 1792. His son Robert, thirteenth Governor of Maryland (1806-1809) and twice reëlected, was born at Blakeford, November 20, 1752.

---

BLAKEFORD

---

Robert Wright was educated at the public schools, studied law, and, having been admitted to the bar, practised first in Chestertown and later in Queenstown, Maryland. He served as a private in Capt. James Kent's company of "Minute Men" against Lord Drummond's Tories of the Eastern Shore of Virginia, February, 1776. Later he was a captain of a company in the Maryland Line and fought with distinction in a number of important engagements, notably the battle of Brandywine. In 1801, he was elected to the United States Senate, but resigned from that august body in 1806 when elected Governor of Maryland. During his first term much excitement was occasioned by the passage of the Embargo and Enforcement Acts; he presided at a meeting held at Annapolis to endorse the administration. At this meeting were passed resolutions asking President Jefferson to reconsider his determination to decline a renomination. Although Maryland's export trade had been grievously crippled by the passage of the Embargo Act, the Governor and the Legislature still endorsed the administration.

In 1810, 1812, 1814, and again in 1820, Robert Wright was elected to Congress. In 1823 he became District Judge of the circuit comprising Queen Anne, Kent, and Talbot counties. He lived at Blakeford with his wife, who was Sarah De Courcy, of Chestonon-Wye, and there, on September 7, 1826, he died. His particular hobby was the breeding and training of thoroughbred race-horses, turning out such famous heroes of the race-track as Blakeford, Uncas, Silver Heels. There was a fine race-track on the place which is still to be seen, and where lovers of the "sport of kings" were wont to gather. Judge Wright—or Captain, or Senator, or Governor, for he was rich in titles as in worldly goods—also did much to encourage farming interests and frequently served in the capacity of delegate to farmers' conventions. He was a trustee of the Board of Agriculture for the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Robert Wright married his distant cousin, Sarah De Courcy, of Cheston-on-Wye, and became the father of William Henry De Courcy, a distinguished public man of Maryland, and grandfather of the present owner of Blakeford, De Courcy Wright Thom, of Baltimore and Queen Anne's County.

The De Courcys, although originally French, came to this country from Ireland. In the early records of the Colony, as has been noted, the name was spelled Coursey, but Capt. Edwin Coursey in his will instructed his sons to resume the original spelling, De Courcy, and this precept has been followed by all succeeding generations of the house.

---

BLOOMINGDALE

QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

HARRIS—WALLIS—DUDLEY

---

HE most magnificent colonial homestead in Queen Anne's County, Maryland, from an architectural point of view, is Bloomingdale, about three miles from historic Queenstown, one of the first points of settlement on the eastern shore of the Chesapeake Bay. Of late years the old place has been allowed to fall into a sad condition of disrepair in the hands of tenant farmers, but enough is left to show its state when it was new.

The house is situated on the crest of a hill which overlooks the low, rolling country round about. In the distance are to be seen the blue waters of a little estuary of the bay. Great, ragged trees and an unkempt greensward are the immediate environs. The approach is through a mile-long avenue of cedar trees, through whose dark tunnel the front of the house beckons on. Originally, great hedges of cedars extended from either side of the house like green pennons half a mile long, but these have been cut down for telegraph posts in these latter days. Even the park around the house has been curtailed in area to make room for the planting of more corn and "crops."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Bloomingdale is distinguished for the excellence of its brickwork, the bricks being set with an oyster-shell mortar so hard that a cold chisel can with difficulty penetrate it, and so evenly that they look like the bricks ruled on paper in children's toy-houses. Over the main doorway, in the middle of the central front of the house, is a balcony. At the east side of the house is a small, square, covered porch with steps on two sides. The house has but one wing, which is to the west.

On the interior is a very beautiful, broad hallway which extends from front to back, ensuring a cool house whenever any air is stirring. The stairway leads from the rear of the hall and extends straight from the first floor to the attic above the second. Hardwood, once polished until it shone, forms the floor of the hall which is wainscoted to the height of about three feet. The fireplaces in parlour and dining-room are very handsomely carved but the house as a whole does not contain much interior ornamentation.

Concerning the early history of Bloomingdale, C. Phillips Armstrong, who has spent much time in looking into the subject, has written as follows:

The farm bearing the name of Bloomingdale, halfway between Wye Mills and Queenstown in Queen Anne's County, contains over 600 fertile acres. The original tract contained over 1,000 acres and was a grant to the old Seth family from Lord Baltimore and included what was known as Harris' Mill. The whole of this vast acreage remained the property of the Seth family of Talbot County for many years and at one time was

BLOOMINGDALE
Built in 1792

---

BLOOMINGDALE

---

known as Seth's Mills. In the early records of the State of Maryland and those of Queen Anne's County particularly, frequent reference is made to Seth's Mill, and the description there is such as to correspond unmistakably with what afterward came to be called Bloomingdale. Once owned by the late Edward Harris, Bloomingdale was inherited from him in 1835 by Misses Mary D. and Sallie Harris. Upon the death of the latter in 1874, it went into the possession of Hon. S. Teackle Wallis, of Baltimore. In 1889 it was purchased by Hiram G. Dudley from John Mather Wallis, heir of S. Teackle Wallis.

The main structure was built in 1792, but the wing is much older, though it is not possible to set an exact date to its erection. Not far from the house is the slave quarter, a long, bare brick building which accommodated sixteen negro families, one family to each of the sixteen narrow windows.

The most brilliant part of Bloomingdale's life was that spent during the years when the Misses Harris were mistresses of it. Miss Sallie Harris, the elder sister, was a notable figure in the fashionable world of Baltimore, where the sisters as young ladies spent most of their winters, and when she retired to Bloomingdale after youth had passed she carried with her a devoted court of admirers. Miss Mary D. Harris was of shyer temperament than her sister and did not so greatly enjoy the social successes which filled her sister's life. They entertained generously and caused the old house to be filled with a gay and pleasant circle at all times.

Many stories are told of the Misses Harris by old residents of Queenstown. As you drive out to the house, your driver will tell you of how as a small boy he went to Bloomingdale, was taken into the house by Miss Harris, and given sweet cakes. There are many tales of kindnesses done by these two spinster ladies and there is also the pathetic recollection of how broken Miss Sallie Harris was by the death of her sister, who left her alone in the world through which they had voyaged together so bravely.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The paintings at Bloomingdale which were imported from the Old World in the stately Colonial days attracted great attention from distinguished visitors and guests and one was given additional celebrity by being the subject of an animated controversy between the venerable Bishop Whittingham and a Catholic prelate. In one room, a little winter parlour, and a dreamer's paradise, were hung most of the family portraits, and here were pictures of the maiden sisters, made in the heyday of their youth and dressed alike in black velvet and pearls, but with only the outline of family resemblance between them. The name of the artist is not known but he gave to posterity the fair patrician faces of two of the rarest beauties of the day. The one looked down in the blue-eyed serenity of a household divinity; the other with a shade of deeper thought or a trace of hauteur.

It is but fitting that Bloomingdale should have a ghost. The story was printed in one of Queen Anne County's newspapers in 1879 and told by an eyewitness. One night Miss Sally Harris and a guest, Mrs. Nancy De Courcy, had retired, when a rap was heard at the front door. Both ladies were alarmed, but Mrs. De Courcy accompanied the servant to the door and was

SIDE PORCH AT BLOOMINGDALE

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO THE STEMMER HOUSE

---

BLOOMINGDALE

---

confronted by the apparition of William Sterrett, a deceased nephew of Miss Harris. The figure moved down the hall, beckoning to the frightened human beings to follow it, until it came to the door of the room in which it had been accustomed to sleep when in the flesh. Then, without pausing, it went through the door. When the terrified onlookers at last unlocked the door of this room, which had been kept closed for some time, nothing was to be found inside, yet the bed looked rumpled as if somebody had slept in it and just left it. Sterrett's ghost was never again seen, and a thorough search of the house on the night of his one visit failed to disclose anything that would give a reasonable explanation of the strange figure which the frightened women and the servant had seen.

After the death of Miss Sallie Harris, the old place was preserved in the style in which she had kept it by her nephew and heir, Severn Teackle Wallis, who lived the last years of his life here. A man of large means, Wallis spent most of his years in Baltimore where he is remembered for his large benefactions, and is memorialized by a statue in Mount Vernon Place, the most beautiful section of that city. He left the estate at his death to his nephew, John Mather Wallis, from whom it was purchased in 1889 by Mr. Hiram G. Dudley, of Baltimore and Queen Anne's County, who has a country home at Hemsley Farm, not far from Bloomingdale.

---

MONTMORENCI

BALTIMORE COUNTY, MARYLAND

WORTHINGTON—CONRAD—LEHR

---

NEAR the hamlet of Glyndon, Baltimore County, Maryland, in the Worthington Valley, is to be found the old Worthington homestead, Montmorenci, built about 1760 by Samuel Worthington who married Mary Tolley. From these two a long line with many branches has descended, and from this generous old home have gone forth many sturdy sons who have played conspicuous parts among their fellows. The house is finely situated on the crest of a hill in the centre of the thousand and more acres which remain to it of the vast tracts over which it lorded when it was young, and is as sound and weatherproof to-day as when it was new.

It is of stone and plaster construction, the walls being very thick and the foundations of a mass sufficient to support a battlemented tower. A winding road leads from the entrance of the grounds to the front of the house, and from the rear the ground falls sharply away to the Italian garden which the present mistress of the old home, Mrs. Mary Conrad Lehr, of Montmorenci and Washington, is devising at the foot of this declivity. The exterior of the house is plain, and there is a small

MONTAFORENCI, THE WORTHINGTON HOMESTEAD

THE WINDING STAIR

PARLOUR CORNER

BITS OF MONTMORENCI

---

MONTMORENCI

---

wing at the north end which contains the kitchen and pantries.

The interior arrangement of Montmorenci is like that of many another old Maryland home in that it has a broad hallway from front to back of the house, on which as an axis the other rooms are symmetrically disposed. The winding staircase, however, with its slender mahogany rail and its slim, patrician mahogany spokes, is a very graceful and unusual feature and is perhaps one of the mansion's greatest beauties.

In Montmorenci may be found a great quantity of rare old furniture which (as is not always the case) has found an appreciative mistress in the daughter of the house of this generation. It would be, perhaps, without interest to mention styles and periods well known or to attempt in any way a description of the furniture, but in each room of the house are to be found pieces to interest the lover of things colonial, and so great a quantity has Mrs. Lehr that she is able to furnish her new home in Washington from Montmorenci without seeming to have robbed that place.

Not far from Montmorenci is Bloomfield, another old Worthington place and built by a son of the builder of Montmorenci. It is a brick homestead and is distinguished for the carving which graces the north wall of the living room on the interior. Though long a Worthington possession, it has been for a number of years the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Councilmann.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The Worthington family has already received a brief summary in the chapter devoted to Belvoir, the beautiful mansion on the Severn in Anne Arundel County, Maryland. The tombstone of the founder of the family in Maryland, Capt. John Worthington, is to be found in a vacant field not far from Annapolis and still in good preservation. From it we learn that Captain John died in 1701. His son, John, styled "Merchant" in his will (in which he disposes of a great fortune), married Helen Hammond, daughter of Thomas Hammond and his wife, Mary Heath, and had, among other children, Samuel Worthington, who married Mary Tolley, daughter of Walter Tolley, of Joppa, Baltimore County, Maryland, and built Montmorenci.

From Samuel Worthington the homestead descended through Edward, his son, to John Tolley Worthington, first, to John Tolley Worthington, second, his great-grandson, who married Mary Govane Hood, daughter of James Hood, of Hood's Mill, Baltimore County, Maryland. From him it descended to his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Worthington Conrad, now an invalid, whose daughter (who married Louis C. Lehr, Esq.) is the present mistress of Montmorenci.

---

BELVOIR

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, MARYLAND

ROSS—MAYNADIER—WORTHINGTON—POLUYANSKI

---

N Wyatt's Ridge, overlooking Round Bay, some half a dozen miles up the Severn River from the "Ancient City," Annapolis, is Belvoir, one of the most picturesque colonial homes in Maryland. Belvoir is a brick building with a wide hallway and large, well-proportioned rooms, and was built by John Ross, Register of the Land Office of Maryland in colonial days. This John Ross was the father of Anne Arnold Ross, who married Francis Key, son of Philip Key, of St. Mary's County, and became in due course the great-grandfather of the immortal Francis Scott Key, author of our stirring national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner." Young Francis Scott Key, who lived with his aunt and guardian, Mrs. Upton Scott, formerly Elizabeth Ross, in Annapolis, and was educated at St. John's College (the endowed William and Mary College of revolutionary times), spent many pleasant hours at Belvoir.

From the original owners Belvoir passed to Colonel Maynadier, of Old Windsor, Baltimore County, but it is with the name of Worthington, rather than Ross or Maynadier, that Belvoir is identified. Brice John Worthington, great-grandson of the famous Captain

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

John who established the Worthingtons in Maryland, purchased Belvoir in the year 1760, from Colonel Maynadier, thereby extending his Summer Hill estate from Eagle's Nest Bay to South River, a distance of seven miles. The purchase price was $25,000, but that it was an excellent investment is evidenced from the fact that its new owner realized half that sum in the first year from tobacco alone.

Brice John Worthington was an enthusiastic follower of the hounds, like many another of the landed gentry of the day, and it was while on a fox-hunting expedition as a guest of Colonel Maynadier that he met Anne Lee Fitzhugh, whom he subsequently married. He was a son of Nicholas Worthington, son of Thomas, son of Captain John and was fourth in line of descent to serve with distinction in the legislative halls at Annapolis. He was an ardent Federalist, and stood nobly by Samuel Chase, signer of the Declaration of Independence, and justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, at the time of the latter's impeachment for injudicious utterances from the bench.

The Worthington family is one of the most prominent in Maryland, and through marriage is connected with nearly every other family of distinction: Dorsey, Brice, Warfield, Hammond, Goldsborough, Contee, Ridgely, Howard, and Chew. The Worthingtons came to this country from England, where, according to Burke, the town of Worthington in the "Hundred of

ENTRANCE TO BELVOIR

---

BELVOIR

---

Leyland," near Liverpool, has been "in high repute from the time of the Plantagenets."

The first Worthington to settle in Maryland was Captain John, that famous old Indian fighter, in 1670. In 1686 Captain John purchased Greenbury Forest from Col. Nicholas Greenbury, and shortly thereafter married Sarah Howard, a daughter of Matthew Howard, his neighbour on the Severn River. In 1692 he was appointed Associate Justice of Anne Arundel County, and in 1699 was a member of the Legislative Assembly. At the time of his death in 1701 he owned, in addition to Greenbury Forest, a number of valuable tracts of land: Lowe's Addition, Howard's Pasture, Pendenny, and Expectation, and many nameless tracts aggregating a vast acreage. His tomb, an immense slab of gray marble, lies opposite the United States Naval Academy, just a few yards from the old homestead. It is excellently preserved, and the inscription is quite legible:

Here Lieth Interred The Body Of Captain John Worthington,
Who Departed This Life, April 9, 1701,
Aged 51 years.

Belvoir continued in the possession of the Worthington family until within recent years. The surviving children of Nicholas Brice Worthington are: Joseph Muse, Eugene, Mrs. Gordon Handy Claude (formerly

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Sophia Muse Worthington), and Rear-Admiral Walter Fitzhugh Worthington of the United States Navy, all of Annapolis.

The present owner is Reuben J. Poluyanski, who, by the generous application of brilliant pigments to the walls and woodwork, has made the "green," "yellow" and "blue" rooms of this beautiful old place quite unmistakable.

The mansion is situated on a high ridge and has a beautiful outlook over the blue waters of Round Bay, the head of the Severn River, which it faces. Architecturally its design is that of a capital letter T, the head of the T being the front of the house and the post towards the river. At the base of the ridge on which Belvoir is situated and between the old house and the river, is the course of the Annapolis-Baltimore post-road, a very important avenue of travel one hundred years ago but now very rarely traversed.

The doorway of the house is situated about one-third off the middle of the front and is introduced by a very quaint portico with arched ceiling and pointed roof. The door contains a massive old knocker bearing the Worthington coat-of-arms.

When you enter the house, you are struck by the thickness of the walls. The house, being situated on such an exposed height, required even thicker walls than was the custom of the time in which it was erected. There is some very pretty wood-carving, particularly of

BELVOIR, FROM THE SOUTH

---

BELVOIR

---

the mantels in the parlour and dining-room, but the house does not contain a great deal of ornamentation.

The brickwork of the walls is very solid, and the bricks are larger than ordinary. The foundation walls in the cellar are fully five feet thick, and in the cellar, also, is to be found a dungeon constructed by the original owners for mischievous or unruly slaves. It is safe to assert that a taste of this hole's black recesses would cure any negro of propensity to violence.

That this means of correction was of little use to the Worthingtons, however, we may believe from the statement of Dr. Joseph Muse Worthington, a beloved physician of Annapolis, who was born at Belvoir and who says that in his recollection of his father he knew him only once to deal severely with a servant and that was when a negro woman attempted to kill one of her fellow-workers with a kitchen knife.

The garden of Belvoir lies to the front of the house and even in its desolation to-day shows the beauty that must have been its own when in perfection. It has the outlook over Round Bay that is one of the great charms of the house, and contains many shrubs and flowers which once on a time would have contented an observer near at hand, without his having to look to distance for beauty.

Not far from the garden but to the back of the house is an old barn, very interesting as showing how solidly our forefathers could build these adjuncts to life when they chose. Its walls are of brick half-way up and are almost as thick as those of the "big house" itself. One of its especial features is a heavy chimney with a space for an open fire at the bottom. The barn was used as a living room by the slaves of the plantation and, in accordance with the traditions of the place, must needs be comfortable for them as much as for the most honoured guest in the great house.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Not far away are the remains of the slave quarters themselves, which were solid log and mortar structures.

About half a mile from Belvoir, but on the Belvoir grounds, is the grave of Ann Arnold Key, grandmother of Francis Scott Key, composer of the national anthem, whose resting-place has been protected by the Maryland Chapter of the Colonial Dames of America by the placing around it of a heavy chain fence. The fence forms a little square with the insignificant stone which marks the grave as its centre. Standing about are great sycamore trees and tall grass covers the ground. It is a desolate scene, yet the simple action of the Colonial Dames has given a warm touch of humanity to it all.

---

PLAIN DEALING

TALBOT COUNTY, MARYLAND

CHAMBERLAINE—LOCKERMAN—HARDCASTLE

---

EW old places in the State of Maryland can boast of finer traditions than Plain Dealing, the homestead of the Chamberlaine family. On Plain Dealing Creek the Indians were wont to trade with the Friends, exchanging pelts, deerskins and things of their manufacture for those things which the white men had brought from the Old World. As the Friends always dealt honestly with the Indians, the latter named the creek "Plain Dealing," and it is from the creek on which it is situated that the Chamberlaine homestead gets its name. A large stone now marks the spot at the edge of the water where the Indians traded with the white men. Plain Dealing is in Talbot County, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, across from the town of Oxford (settled in 1695) on the Tred Avon River, one of the most beautiful streams of the Eastern Shore.

Plain Dealing was deeded to the Chamberlaine family during the reign of Queen Anne. This was the first home of the Chamberlaines in America, and was built in 1758 by Samuel Chamberlaine, who was born at Saughall on the Dee, England, in 1697. His father, Thomas Chamberlaine, and his uncle John had for many years engaged in trade with the colonies in America, and owned many ships plying between Liverpool, England, and Oxford, Maryland. Coming to the New World in one of these ships, Thomas, in 1714, decided to settle at Oxford. The family derives its name from John, Count de Tankerville, Lord Chamberlain to Henry I, of England, in the early part of the twelfth century. Richard, son of John, succeeded to his father's possession in the royal household, and assumed the patronymic of Chamberlain, but retained the Tankerville coat-of-arms. In 1735, Samuel moved from Oxford to Plain Dealing. At that time he was one of the richest men in the county, owning thousands of fertile acres. For many years he was a member of the Lord Proprietor's Council, Deputy Naval Officer of Pocomoke and Oxford, and Collector of the Port of Oxford, to which latter position his son Thomas in due course succeeded.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

There is a tradition at Plain Dealing of how Susan Robins of Peach Blossoms married Thomas Chamberlaine, eldest son of Samuel and Henrietta Maria Chamberlaine, and was taken to his lovely home on Plain Dealing Creek. Soon after their marriage the husband died, and for seven years his disconsolate widow sat at a window in her room gazing out upon the grave of her husband in the nearby burying ground. Rumor has it that at night she had a lantern placed upon the grave that her eyes might still rest upon the sacred spot. For seven years the widow refused to be comforted, and then one day she saw her handsome cousin, Robert Lloyd Nichols, ride past the window at which she sat. Their eyes met, her sorrow vanished, and the beautiful widow shortly afterwards married her dashing young cousin who had ridden between her and the grave of the husband whom she mourned.

---

PLAIN DEALING

---

In the old graveyard, now overrun with weeds and bushes, are two large marble slabs, on which the Chamberlaine coat-of-arms is beautifully engraved. One of these marks the grave of Col. Thomas Chamberlaine, whose widow so faithfully kept vigil over his grave during seven long, weary years. The second marks the grave of Henrietta Maria Chamberlaine, wife of Samuel Chamberlaine and eldest daughter of Col. James Lloyd of Talbot County. "She departed this life on the 29th day of March, 1749, aged 37 years, 2 months and 3 days."

Near this historic old graveyard is a large depression in the earth, concerning which there is a story well known to the residents of the Eastern Shore. According to this story, some three-quarters of a century ago Plain Dealing was occupied by two brothers of the name of Valliant. One night one of the brothers had a dream that beneath the spot referred to there was gold buried. The following day the two brothers started to dig. At the sight of the gold which they actually found one of the brothers lost his mind. The value of the gold thus unearthed is unknown, but with it the surviving brother purchased Sharpe's Island, which then contained about seven hundred acres. To-day, not more than twenty acres survive the unremitting attack of the waters of the Chesapeake.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Like many another colonial home of Maryland, Plain Dealing has its ghost. An owner of the mansion, according to the tale which obtains, fell from the upper story over the carved railing into the hall, breaking his neck, and leaving a stain of blood upon the floor which even the passage of the centuries has not erased. After his death the house was neglected, and began to go to ruin. Its handsome panelling and carving began to decay; its walls crumbled and became moss-covered; its spreading roof showed signs of advancing age; the old furniture became covered with dust; the old portraits of patrician men and women, with powdered wigs and once-immaculate ruffs, became stained and mouldy, while from the wet cellar came dank, miasmatic airs as from a tomb. The family burying ground, just across the lawn upon the banks of the creek, became a tangled mass of weeds, trees and underbrush, while the vaults cracked open and their ghostly occupants stalked at will—an ideal setting in truth for ghostly visitants, but to enhance this, the neglected old dwelling became the abode of "Katie Coburn, the witch." This witch, the last of her line known in Talbot County, was aged, deformed and hideous. Children fled at her approach and negroes were terror-stricken at the very mention of her name. The threat that "Katie Coburn will get you if you don't look out" had a salutary effect on the behaviour of the former, and the latter were in constant fear of being hoodooed by a wicked glance from her "evil eye." Negroes wore charms to counteract her spells—rabbit foot and what not—and it may be assumed they did not crowd upon the heels of "Katie Coburn, the witch," as she walked the highway.

---

PLAIN DEALING

---

Not far from Plain Dealing there was a farmer whose cows pastured near the old Chamberlaine burying ground. One afternoon the boy whose duty it was to drive the cows home, had to go near the lonely spot, and beheld to his amazement a stranger there—a man, tall, stately, and attired in the fashion of a bygone period. The man spoke to the boy; the latter fled. The story was dismissed as the idle fancy of a child. Again and again the lad saw the same strange visitant, until at last he spoke to him, and in response saw him walk to a certain spot in the burying ground and look downward, stamping his foot. This performance was gone through several evenings between the boy and the silent spectre. On one occasion the spectre led the boy—now no longer afraid of him—into the deserted old home and pointed to a portrait on the wall. The boy saw that his guide was strangely like the portrait. Leading the lad back to the graveyard, the spectre pointed downwards and stamped his foot as before. As it was growing dark and the cows had already gone homeward, the boy suddenly decided to go also and lost no time in so doing. Still they laughed at his story, but then came the rumour that "witch Katie" had not only disappeared from Plain Dealing, but no trace of her was to be discovered in the surrounding country. The boy had not seen her since the coming of his strange acquaintance of the graveyard. At last, so impressed were the parents of the boy with the story of the strange visitor—daily seen in the gloaming and now become the talk of the neighbourhood—that the father accompanied his son one evening to investigate the phenomenon.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

"There he is, father. See, he has gone to the same spot and is pointing to the ground," exclaimed the boy.

The father was unable to see, but he was impressed with the look and manner of his son, and replied:

"Well, my son, we will see what the ghost is pointing out to us."

The spectre was seen no more, but the family of the boy to whom the spectre had revealed himself grew suddenly rich. According to the legend, they belonged to a noble family in England, who, having been defrauded of their inheritance, came to America to seek a home, and that this ghost, one of their ancestors, had enriched them by pointing out the treasure, discovering himself (for some unknown reason) only to the lad.

---

PLAIN DEALING

---

Since 1735 Plain Dealing has been in the possession of but three families, the Chamberlaines, the Lockermans, and the Hardcastles. Gen. E. L. F. Hardcastle, the present owner, bought the farm in 1856, and built the present substantial and beautiful addition to the original mansion. The original part of the house built in 1735 forms the rear part of the building as it stands to-day.

---

BEVERLY

SOMERSET COUNTY, MARYLAND

DENNIS

---

EVERLY, the old homestead of the Dennis family, is on the Pocomoke River, Somerset County, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, about six miles from Pocomoke City. The original estate, which contained over 1,600 acres, extending beyond what is now the Virginia line, at present contains only 500 acres. It was first patented in 1664 by Dannock Dennis during the reign of Charles II. The estate has been in the possession of the Dennis family for nine generations, extending over a period of more than two hundred years. The present owner is James Teagle Dennis, of Baltimore and the Green Spring Valley, Maryland, who is a lineal descendant of the original owner. Prior to Mr. James T. Dennis's possession, the place was owned by Arthur C. Dennis, of Winnipeg, Canada; Alfred P. Dennis, of Pocomoke City, Maryland; and Samuel K. Dennis, of Baltimore, and was occupied by their mother and sister.

Beverly is well situated and has a commanding outlook upon the water of Pocomoke Sound, half a dozen miles to the south. A straight, broad avenue, flanked by red cedars, leads out from the front of the house through orchards and cornfields for nearly a mile to the country road at the eastern edge of the plantation. The velvet lawns, the beautiful river terrace, the stately pines and cypresses rising above a well-kept garden, materially enhance the natural beauty of the site.

---

BEVERLY

---

The present dwelling is the second of the ancient manor houses, and was erected about 1774 by Susannah Dennis. The first was destroyed by fire in the early part of the eighteenth century. The house is of the familiar Georgian model and contains much carving. So typical of Maryland colonial homes was it considered that it was reproduced in outline on the silver service presented some years since to the cruiser Maryland by the state for which the battle-ship was named.

The interior woodwork of the house is of heart yellow pine. The wainscoting, staircases and window seats are wrought out by hand in the style of the middle of the eighteenth century. The iron porch on the west side of the house, overlooking the river, is of a style rarely seen out of England, whence it came. The front porch (facing the main entrance on the east), with its great white columns and its wide upper veranda, is in the conventional type of the period in which it was built. A colony of nearly one hundred slaves was contained on the plantation until the Civil War, and the marks of the self-centred, self-supporting character of the antebellum days are strong upon the old Beverly estate. There is still an old smoke-house, in which for more than two centuries, extending down to the present date, the family meats have been smoked, and remnants of the old negro quarters, the "ship-yard lot," the "saw-bit lot," the "tan-yard lot" and "blacksmith lot" exist. In the old carriage-shed a coach of the Louis Quinze period, with iron steps, leather straps and seats for lackeys, still stands. This is one of the picturesque old coaches of early days and was drawn by six richly caparisoned horses driven by pompous darkies in magnificent liveries.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

There is a family graveyard and two negro burying grounds. In the former, nine generations of the distinguished Dennis family have been laid to rest, and here, also, may be seen the handsome tomb, with its quaint lettering, of Susannah Dennis, who was the first mistress of the present Beverly homestead.

---

SOTTERLY

ST. MARY'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

BOWLES—PLATER—BRISCOE—SATTERLEE

---

NE of the most historic places in Maryland is Sotterly, the Plater mansion in Saint Mary's County, on the Patuxent River. Through its purchase in 1910 by Herbert L. Satterlee, of New York—whose wife was a daughter of the late financier, J. Pierpont Morgan—the old homestead has singularly enough come into the hands of one who is not descended from the family of its builder, but who is descended from the family from which the English seat of the family of its builder took its name. Sotterly, in other words, derives its cognomen from "Sotterle," the seat of the Plater family in England; and this Plater seat in England was long years ago purchased from the Sotterle family of which Mr. Satterlee to-day is an American descendant. Needless to say, it is finely maintained and in its present hands is a magnificent example, indeed, of the fine dwelling house of the early colonial period of the nation's history in a cavalier section of the provinces.

The house is of frame with brick foundation, gables, and porches and a flagstone colonnade. It is in the shape of a capital letter Z and is one and a half stories in height with a steep roof, surmounted by a cupola and pierced with triangular capped dormer windows. From cellar to foot of the hill below the house leads a secret passageway of brick.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The rooms are large and airy on the first floor but low and sloping on the second. Throughout the house is a great deal of fine panelling and in the parlour, in particular, is to be found a quantity of delicate carving, the ornamentation of the alcoves here being especially fine. The doors of the parlour are of solid mahogany, swung on solid brass straps extending about two feet out from the frame.

The stairway is of mahogany and the balustrade and newel post are of an ingenious filigree which, family tradition tells us, was devised by a mechanic named Bowen who was one of the "King's seven year convicts." He was purchased by the builder of Sotterly and liberated for his devoted work here.

James Walter Thomas, the historian of Saint Mary's County, says:

In the front yard of Sotterly formerly stood two small square buildings with cone-shaped roofs. The one stood at the garden gate and was used as a wine and smoking room; the other stood immediately opposite, and was used as the office of the Collector and Naval Officer of the Patuxent District. The former of these is now at the foot of the yard, opposite the old "Gate Lodge," the other is in the barn-yard, flanked by a series of sheds and used as a granary.

Sotterly was erected about 1780 by James Bowles.

---

SOTTERLY

---

For a number of years it was known as Bowles' Separation, as the ground on which it stood was originally part of Fenwick's Manor, one of the earliest grants of land in the province of Maryland, and was "separated" from it for Bowles. At first it contained 2,000 acres, but this number has long since dwindled to the present comparatively modest limits of the estate. After no long time James Bowles died, and his widow married the Hon. George Plater, one of the most important men of the province. James Walter Thomas says:

The Hon. George Plater was a member of the Assembly and Attorney General of Maryland as early as 1691, and from 1692 to 1720 was the Collector of Customs for the Patuxent.

Governor George Plater, only son of Hon. George Plater, and heir of Sotterly, was born in 1736, and was educated at William and Mary's College. In 1760 he visited England, where he was introduced by letters from Governor Horatio Sharpe. He seems to have made an agreeable impression while there upon Lord Baltimore, who shortly after indicated to Governor Sharpe his desire to have him associated "in the affairs of the Province," and with which he soon became so prominently connected. He married Ann Rousby, the only child of Col. John Rousby, of the once famous and beautiful estate on the Calvert side of the Patuxent, known as Rousby Hall. Mrs. Plater enjoys the reputation of having been a woman possessed of rare personal beauty and stately elegance. Her rich patrimony, added to the already large estate of her husband, enabled the occupants of Sotterly to live in courtly style, and in full keeping with their distinguished position, as is clearly attested by the will of Governor Plater and the inventory of his estate. Governor George and Ann Rousby Plater left two daughters, Ann and Rebecca (whose fame for beauty and accomplishments have lived to the present day), and three sons, George, Thomas, and John Rousby Plater. Ann Plater married the distinguished jurist and statesman, Philip Barton Key, and Rebecca married General Uriah Forrest, of the Maryland line; George, eldest son of Governor George Plater and heir of Sotterly, married, first, March 9, 1795, Cecelia B. Bond, of Southampton, and second, March 22, 1798, Elizabeth Somerville. He died in 1802, leaving by his first marriage George, who inherited Sotterly and lost it, and by his second Ann Elizabeth Plater, who married her cousin, John Rousby Plater. Judge John Rousby, second son of Governor George Plater, married Elizabeth Tuttle, of Annapolis, Maryland. He died in 1832.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

There is an interesting story told of Ann Rousby, who was the wife of Gov. George Plater. Mrs. Rousby, the mother, became a widow at twenty, and as mistress of a fine estate and proprietress of many personal charms as well, was much sought after in marriage. Among the most ardent of her wooers was a Colonel Fitzhugh, of Virginia, who was leaving Rousby Hall one day when he espied Mrs. Rousby's infant daughter asleep with its nurse near the water side. He approached the sleeping child and took it in his arms, and before the startled mother, who had followed his movements with wondering eyes, could guess what he was about, had held the infant far out over the water.

"If you do not promise to marry me, I will drop this child into the current," he said.

The distracted mother gave the promise asked and not long after became the bride of Colonel Fitzhugh. The infant whose tiny life was the battlefield of two wills was that Ann Rousby who became the wife of Governor George Plater.

---

SOTTERLY

---

Early in the nineteenth century, after more than a hundred years of possession, Sotterly passed from the Platers and until its purchase by Mr. Satterlee belonged to the family of Dr. Walter Hanson Stone Briscoe.

A descendant of the Platers of Sotterly is Mrs. Kirby Flower Smith, of Baltimore, wife of Prof. Kirby Flower Smith, of Johns Hopkins University, whose great-great-grandfather was John Rousby Plater.

---

DEEP FALLS

ST. MARY'S COUNTY, MARYLAND

THOMAS

---

NOT far from the village of Chaptico, Saint Mary's County, Maryland, is the quaint Thomas homestead, Deep Falls, now the summer home of James Walter Thomas, lawyer, of Cumberland, Maryland, and historian-author of "Chronicles of Saint Mary's County." Somewhat fallen to frayed ends in later years, Deep Falls has recently been restored in the smallest detail, to its condition when new, by its present master.

In a proprietary grant of March 26, 1680, the estate of Deep Falls is spoken of as "Wales," but shortly the name became that which it bears to-day. The house was erected by Major William Thomas about 1745 and has never passed from the hands of descendants of the builder.

To approach Deep Falls one drives through a beautiful wooded avenue. The house itself is situated on an eminence which commands a fine view. In appearance it is like an English country dwelling-house, its most distinguished feature being the group of great chimneys which tower above its roof-line. It is sixty feet long and forty feet deep and has wide piazzas, front and back, running its whole length, supported by massive pillars.

---

DEEP FALLS

---

It is a large, double two-story frame building with brick foundation. While the whole effect of the old mansion is that of massive simplicity, yet it is so well proportioned in all of its parts that it is not without grace.

In the rear of the house are five terraces, each one hundred feet long and ten feet deep, which lead to the plateau below, where is an old-time garden of Queen Anne design filled with beautiful old flowering shrubs and bushes. On either side of the house are broad lawns made picturesque by gentle undulations and rich and varied foliage. Not far from the house is the graveyard dedicated to family burial for more than a century and a half, and containing within its limits the successive generations that have lived and passed away at Deep Falls.

The interior of the house does not contain a great deal of ornamentation, and bears out the character of the simplicity which marks the outside, but it is distinguished by the staircase which leads off from the main hall at the rear, its point of departure being signalized by a beautiful arch. The sides of the stair are panelled and carved; the newel posts are of maple with rosewood tops surmounted with an ivory knob.

This William Thomas, builder of Deep Falls, was the son of John Thomas, Charles County, where he was born in 1714. He removed early in life to St. Mary's County and resided there until his death. He was a delegate to the Revolutionary Convention in 1775, and a member of the Committee of Safety for St. Mary's County in the same year. He married Elizabeth Thomas, daughter of Thomas Reeves, and died at his residence in March, 1795, leaving four sons and a daughter.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

Thomas Thomas, first of his name in Maryland, was one of the early settlers on the Patuxent River, there being a survey made out for him—known as Broad Neck—in 1651. In 1671 he died, leaving amongst other items “2 pewter dishes, 1 pewter Bason, 3 poringers, 6 spoons, 1 Dutch pott and pott hooke and 1 dish,” to his daughter Grace. Others of his children fared equally well.

James, eldest son of Thomas, was born in the year in which his parents came to Maryland. He died in 1701, and left among other children a son John, who was the father of William Thomas, builder of Deep Falls.

William Thomas, son of William, who inherited the homestead, was born at Deep Falls and became a very prominent man of his time. He held the commission of major in the Maryland line of the Continental Army, was member of the House of Delegates of this state, and for twelve years previous to his death, in 1813, was President of the Maryland Senate. He was a prominent freemason, and was elected in June, 1799, Grand Master of Maryland. He married in 1782 Catherine Boarman, daughter of Mary Brook Boarman, and through an inheritance of his wife acquired the historic estate of De La Brook in St. Mary's County. He died at De La Brook on the Patuxent, leaving Deep Falls to his eldest son, James, from whom it has descended to its present owner.

---

DEEP FALLS

---

James Thomas, son of William, inheritor of Deep Falls, was a physician and was educated at St. John's College, Annapolis. In 1883 he was elected Governor of Maryland. He married his cousin, Eliza, daughter of Major William and Elizabeth Thomas Coates.

In the graveyard of Deep Falls may be deciphered the following inscriptions among others:

In memory of Maj.-Gen. James Thomas, Ex-Governor of Maryland, born March 11, 1785, died December 25th, 1845, aged 60 years, 9 months and 14 days. This Monument is erected as a tribute of affection by his children.

Green be the turf above thee,
Friend of my better days;
None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee, but to praise.

Richard Thomas, born June 20, 1797, died Oct. 30th, 1849. He was long a member of the Legislature of Maryland, and for many years President of the Senate with unanimous applause, standing always honorably high in public confidence and private affection.

Major William Thomas Sr., died March 25, 1795, a soldier of the Revolution.

William Thomas, youngest son of Major William and Catherine Boarman Thomas, born March, 1793, studied medicine under Dr. Physick in Philadelphia, graduated in 1814, and took up his home at Cremona, another beautiful homestead of St. Mary's County, on the Patuxent River. He married Eliza Tubman, granddaughter of Henry Greenfield Sothoron and Mary Bond, of Chaptico Manor. He died at Cremona, September 30, 1849, leaving, amongst other children, John Henry Thomas, who married November 12, 1851, Mary Leiper, and resided at Trent Hall, an old estate devised to him by his maternal cousin, John Truman Hawkins. He died June 15, 1893. In the burying ground at Trent Hall are to be found the tombstones of James Truman, Gent., died August 7, 1672, and Nathaniel Truman, Gent., died March 4, 1678.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF MARYLAND

---

The children of John Henry Thomas were: George Leiper Thomas, an attorney of Baltimore; William, who died in 1857; and Elizabeth Snowden Thomas, of Baltimore, present owner of Trent Hall.

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

AMSTEL HOUSE

NEW CASTLE, DELAWARE

VAN DYKE—MOODY—BURNHAM—HAY

---

HE visitor to New Castle, Delaware, who walks up the well-shaded street which bounds the western side of the ancient court square of this delightful little old city will find himself (about a square beyond this commons) in a veritable colony of old houses holding gossip together in stately, old-time fashion. Conspicuous among them is the Amstel House, so known because so christened by its present owners; this is the oldest dwelling-house in New Castle.

Prof. Henry Hanby Hay, the present occupant of this mansion, has spent much of his leisure time, after attending his official duties at Girard College, Philadelphia, in investigation of the history of his home. He has found that the earliest mention of the homestead in the records preserved in the court-house of his native town is to be found in a bill of sheriff's sale bearing the date of 1745, but from structural architectural peculiarities and other suggestive characteristics he places the date of erection of the house at about 1730. This date and the name "Amstel House," a fanciful cognomen derived from the ancient name of "New Amstel" which New Castle bore in older days, he has had carved in a tablet above the door of his home. In construction the house has a great resemblance to Stenton, an old homestead near Philadelphia, whose date of erection is known to have been near that which Professor Hay has assigned to his own domicile. The first occupant of the mansion whose name has been handed down to us of the present day as having lived in it was Governor Nicholas Van Dyke, progenitor of a distinguished line, whose term of office was shortly after the close of the revolutionary war and whose name is associated with many of the great movements of his locality and day.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

New Castle, in Governor Van Dyke's day and prior to 1837, indeed, was on the main line of travel between Philadelphia, Baltimore and southern points, and Governor Van Dyke's home entertained many distinguished travellers making their way from one part of the colonies to another. Among these visitors was Lafayette. Washington was a friend of this hospitable patrician also, and was entertained in this old home. In 1774 the enforcement of the Port Bill brought great suffering to many citizens of Boston, Massachusetts. Governor Van Dyke busied himself in raising a subscription for the alleviation of the privations of these unfortunates and secured an amount totalling more than nine hundred dollars of United States currency. Exactly fifty years after this—after the terrible fire of April 24, which destroyed a great part of New

ENTRANCE TO AMSTEL HOUSE
c. 1780

---

AMSTEL HOUSE

---

Castle, including the home of George Read, the signer, and many beautiful colonial mansions of the city—Boston sent generous pecuniary aid to the victims of misfortune in the little Delaware commonalty and selected Nicholas Van Dyke, son of the governor, to be the distributor of its offerings.

From Governor Van Dyke the homestead passed by purchase to Major John Moody, whose daughter married John Burnham, Esq., and inherited the house. At her death she left it to her son, John Burnham, who was the owner until the year 1900, when it was purchased by its present occupants, Prof. Henry Hanby Hay and his wife. Mrs. Hay was a Miss Rodney before her marriage, a native of New Castle, and a great-grand-niece of Cæsar Rodney, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence from Delaware.

The Amstel House is distinguished on the exterior by the heavy roof which far overhangs the pavement. The windows are almost square and very heavily trimmed.

Entering the house through the heavy doorway with its very decided Dutch character, one finds oneself in a hallway bisecting the house and facing a broad stairs with deep, generous steps. To the right is a living-room, the opposite wall of which is heavily and beautifully panelled in wood. To the left is a dining-room. The house contains much panelling throughout and the north wall of the aforementioned living-room has set in it two secret cupboards on either side of the big, old fireplace. In them the master of the house in other days kept the wines and tobaccos with which he regaled his guests. The house, in its present beautifully maintained condition, owes much of its charm to the energy and discretion of Mrs. Hay, who set herself to renovate and restore it where necessary to the state it held when it was new. That she was successful is evidenced by the very charming glimpse its interior gives of home life in the externals as it was lived in the days of our forefathers.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

---

DICKINSON HOUSE

KENT COUNTY, DELAWARE

DICKINSON—LOGAN

---

THE Dickinson House, about seven miles from Dover, Delaware, in Kent County, near Delaware Bay, is a well preserved example of colonial home building. It is a large brick edifice with wings, and its beauty is much enhanced by the fine trees surrounding it.

Samuel Dickinson, the first of the name in Delaware, began to buy lands along St. Jones' Creek and its vicinity about 1715. He was born in Talbot County, Maryland, and moved to Delaware rather late in life. Other branches of his family are still seated in the former state, where an interesting memorial of its existence is Crosiadore, an old homestead not far from Easton, Talbot County, Maryland. On December 3, 1743, he received a deed embracing one thousand three hundred and sixty-eight acres which he named Dickinson's Manor, and on this, about 1750, he built his residence. In 1738 he became one of the magistrates of the court of Kent County, continuing in office for many years. He died at his residence and is buried in a family graveyard adjacent.

"Crosiadore," the Dickinson home in Talbot County, Maryland, is still in existence. A sketch of the old place has been given by Prentiss Ingraham in his "Land of Legendary Lore."

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Here lived the eldest sons of the Dickinson family for many generations. The first house was remodelled into a modern country home; was built of English bricks and in English style. The wainscoted walls and winding staircases spoke of the age in which they were built, then regarded as the most costly and elegant finish for a gentleman's home. The whole appearance and air of the place gives one the impression of refinement and hospitality, while the resourceful country and the beautiful river afford Crosiadore a situation and advantage that make the spot an ideal one for a home. On the walls to-day hang tapestries spun and embroidered by the ladies of that house, and in several instances the subjects of the pictures were romances in the lives of members of the family. On the lawn are grand old trees which have stood guard these many years and have been the silent witnesses to many a gathering of old and young. Alike to wedding marches and funeral dirges have their sighing winds played soft accompaniments; and now in turn they, too, are in the "sere and yellow leaf," yet still replete with memories dear to those who read. "Crosiadore" is a corruption of the French "croix d'or" meaning "cross of gold," derived perhaps from some heraldic design of the ancestors who were engaged in the crusades.

In this old home was born, in 1732, John Dickinson, Governor of Pennsylvania, and founder of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He was the second son of Samuel Dickinson, the grandson of the first proprietor of the estate, and of Mary Cadwalader, his second wife, sister of Dr. Thomas Cadwalader, of Philadelphia. In 1740 Samuel Dickinson moved to Kent County, Delaware. Another scion of this house was the Dickinson who fought and was killed in a duel with President Andrew Jackson. The cause of difference was a trivial one, but, according to the code of those days, honour had to be satisfied by resort to arms. At the first fire Dickinson wounded his opponent, but Jackson, reserving his fire, advanced, shot and killed Dickinson instantly. His body was brought to Talbot County, and he was buried in the adjoining county of Caroline.

---

DICKINSON HOUSE

---

John Dickinson, son of Samuel, and the next occupant of the Dickinson House, was born in Maryland two years before his father moved to Delaware. He was the author of the famous "Farmer's Letters," which created so much discussion just prior to the Revolution on both sides of the Atlantic, and it was in this house that they were written. After the close of the conflict between Great Britain and her colony, Mr. Dickinson moved to Wilmington, and later to Philadelphia where he died in 1801, aged seventy-five years. He left two daughters, Sally N. and Maria. The former was the inheritor of the homestead, but at her death, unmarried, it passed to her sister's children. "At the time of her death," says Scharf, "she was the largest landowner in Kent County, and was assessed on over three thousand acres of highland and marsh."

Maria Dickinson married Albanus Logan, who was descended from William Logan, a man of consequence under Penn's administration, and they had four children. These were Dr. John Dickinson Logan, Gustavus G., Mary N., and Mrs. Betton. When the property was divided between them, Samuel Betton received the north part as his mother's share; Gustavus G., the home property; Doctor John Dickinson, the lower part; and Mary, other lands adjacent.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

The only piece of land sold of the Dickinson estate, since 1743, was disposed of by Miss Sally Dickinson in 1823 to Levick Palmer, who was thus singled out for favour because he was a Quaker.

THE KENNEY JOHNS HOUSE

---

KENSEY JOHNS HOUSE

NEW CASTLE, DELAWARE

JOHNS—STOCKTON—MOORE

---

HE Kensey Johns House, New Castle, Delaware, faces the historic court-house square which has seen four flags fly and four nations conduct their tribunals of justice and is on the northeast corner of Third and Delaware Avenues. It is the largest of the older mansions of the quaint city and is the only one that has that distinctive feature of many colonial homes—a wing. Now occupied by the family of Dr. Lewis Booker, a well-known physician of New Castle, it was built about the close of the eighteenth century by Chief Justice Kensey Johns, one of the distinguished men of the early days of the state of Delaware. The house is two stories and a half in height and has a long extension in the rear. The doorway is chaste and graceful in design, and the interior of the house contains much fine carving.

The builder of this house was noted for his hospitality. He was a man of broad culture and great learning and his library contained more books than were to be found in almost any other collection in the state in that day. He was of Maryland family, and of that family with which the founder of Johns Hopkins University and the Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore was connected. Upon the marriage of his son James, he built the old home now occupied by Mayor James Rodney, of New Castle, as a wedding gift to the pair setting forth upon the seas of matrimony. When his son Kensey married he built for him that house opposite his own at Third and Delaware Avenues; and these two houses, with his own, stand as monuments to his love of fine things and the generosity both of his temperament and his pocket-book. He had three daughters, Susannah (who married Dr. David Stewart, as has been related), Ann, and Nancy (who married Governor Stockton, of Delaware).

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Upon the death of its builder, the Johns House descended to his daughter Nancy and was thus for a while the governor's home of Delaware, during the incumbency of Governor Stockton. The mansion descended by inheritance to the Misses Nancy and Fidelia Stockton, who did not marry, and finally to Miss Elizabeth Moore, of New Castle, their niece, who is the present owner, though not the present occupant.

THE RODNEY HOUSE
Built by Kenney Johns, Esq

---

LOOCKERMAN HOUSE

DOVER, DELAWARE

LOOCKERMAN—BRADFORD—CULBRETH

---

LIKE almost all of the other Delaware colonial homes, the Loockerman House, in Dover, has a great deal of personal charm. It is a brick building two stories in height, without wings, and is remarkable for the beautiful old garden which it retains, a memento of other days. The rooms are large and with lofty ceilings, and the hall has a very quaint and delightful staircase, while in the parlour back of the hall is some very well-preserved panelling, exquisite carving and charming shell-cupboards containing a veritable prince's hoard of old china and glass-ware.

A glass goblet in this collection has cut on it in bold Briton character, "Confusion to the enemies of King George in the Colonies." Another one wears defiantly, "To our Hessian confederates. Confusion to the Colonies." It is not hard to guess the complexion of the house during the revolutionary period.

To get to the famous garden of the Loockerman House, one merely steps through the old-fashioned doorway in the parlour and immediately finds himself in a wilderness of towering box-bushes, great trees which cast a velvety, deep shade in the brightest noonday, and strange flowering plants whose names one does not even know. Of the trees in this garden, some are of a variety known as "Kentucky Coffee Bean," for just what reason it is difficult to discover, the fruits of which, very much like almond kernels in appearance, become hard and lustrous and take a beautiful polish when carried around in the pocket. Needless to say, every small boy in Dover cherishes a Kentucky coffee bean worn to an intense degree of brilliancy.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

In the house is much old furniture brought from England. On the second floor one will find fireplaces with quaint blue Dutch tiles, which were brought from Holland, for the Loockermans are of Knickerbocker ancestry.

Francis Vincent in his History of Delaware writes:

Of all the Delaware Knickerbocker families, none that we know of has so complete a chain of descent as the offspring of the celebrated Govert Loockermans, the sturdy leader of the citizens of New Amsterdam, and colleague of Augustine Herman. From him the Lockermans of Dover are descended. . . .

Govert Loockermans came to New Amsterdam with Vouter Van Twiller, the director general, or governor, of New Netherlands, in the vessel St. Martin or Hope, commanded by Juriaen Blanck, in the month of April, 1633, from Holland in the service of the West India Company. At the time of his arrival he was aged seventeen years. He married Maria Jansen (a daughter of Roelf Jansen and his wife Annetje or Annetke Jans, who, after the death of her husband, married the Reverend Everardus Bogardus) and was by that marriage brother-in-law of Oloff Stevenson Van Courtlandt, whose son founded the Van Courtlandt Manor, in the state of New York; also of Jacob

---

LOOCKERMAN HOUSE

---

Couwenhoven. He filled some of the highest civil and military offices in New Amsterdam. He was despatched with Jan Davitz in May, 1664, across the Green Mountains by Stuyvesant to arrange peace with the Mohawk Indians. At Warrington, he concluded a treaty with them. About the same period he commanded a small armed vessel. He drove the English from a fort they had erected up the Hudson River; also at the head of an armed force he surrounded and utterly extirpated a tribe of hostile Indians on Staten Island, who had greatly annoyed the settlers in New Amsterdam. It is said that the memory of this indiscriminate slaughter of this tribe of Indians, although approved by the popular sentiment of the day, occasioned him much inquietude of conscience after his retirement from active life in his last hours. He was despatched at one period at the head of an armed force to expel the Swedes and English who had encroached on territory claimed by the Dutch on the Delaware River, near the present city of Philadelphia. . . .

After a career of honoured usefulness, Govert Loockermans died in 1670, reputed the richest individual in North America. He was worth 520,000 Dutch guilders, an immense sum when the period in which he lived is considered. His public influence and position after his decease devolved on his son-in-law, Jacob Leisler, who became, by a civil revolution, the first governor of the colony of New Amsterdam.

He left five children: Maritjie, who married Balthazer Bayard; Arietta, who married Samuel Verplank; Jacobus, who married Hellegonda De Kay; Judith, who married Gerardus Stuyvesant, grandson of the last Dutch Governor, Peter Stuyvesant; Joannes, or Jannetje, who married the surgeon, Hans Kiersted.

Jacob Loockermans, second son of Joannes, or Jannetje, was born in the city of New Amsterdam,

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

1650, and studied medicine. He became a planter and, being involved in political troubles, removed about 1681 to the vicinity of Easton, Maryland, with his wife, who was Helena Ketin. He died August 17, 1730, leaving a son, Nicholas, born November 10, 1697, who married Sally Emerson, daughter of Vincent Emerson of The Grange, near Dover. Thither this son removed and made his home, and here he died, March 6, 1769, aged seventy-one years. Other descendants of Jacob Loockermans remained in Maryland, where the family spelling of the name has become "Lockerman," and where the family has at various times been of prominence.

Vincent Loockermans, only child of the above-named Nicholas, was born in 1722, and in 1742 purchased a lot on the north side of King Street, Dover, where he built the Loockerman House, which has never been out of the hands of his descendants. He was twice married. By his first wife, Susannah, he had one child, his namesake. By his second marriage (to Elizabeth Pryor, daughter of John Pryor, merchant, of Dover, in February, 1774) he had two children, Elizabeth and Nicholas Loockerman. The family spelling of the name in Delaware is without the final "s."

Nicholas Loockerman, second son of Vincent and Elizabeth, was born November 27, 1783, and died March 20, 1850. He sat in the legislature, and was never married.

THE STAIRWAY

A CORNER CUPBOARD

CHARACTERISTIC BITS OF THE LOCKEMAN HOUSE

---

LOOCKERMAN HOUSE

---

Elizabeth Loockerman, only daughter of Vincent and Elizabeth, born December 23, 1779, married Thomas Bradford, LL. D., of Philadelphia, counsellor-at-law, May 8, 1805, and died in Philadelphia, April 12, 1842, leaving as her survivors her husband and five children: Vincent, Elizabeth, Benjamin Rush, William, and Thomas Budd. She was buried with her brother in her husband's family vault in the burial ground of the Second Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, which vault has since been transferred to Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia.

Vincent, son of Elizabeth and Thomas Bradford, was a lawyer, but later became a railroad man in Philadelphia. Elizabeth, daughter of Elizabeth and Thomas Bradford, married Rev. William T. Dwight, D.D., of Portland, Maine (a son of Timothy Dwight, D.D., President of Yale College), and had four children.

Thomas Budd Bradford, son of Elizabeth and Thomas Bradford, became a minister of the gospel and resided at the ancestral home in Dover. He married, as his second wife, Lucy H. Porter, daughter of Dr. Robert R. Porter, of Wilmington, Delaware, and departed this life in Dover, March 25, 1871. His daughter, Lucinda H. Bradford, married Mr. Huston Culbreth, of Dover, of distinguished Delaware family, and with her husband is the present occupant of this old home.

The tombstones of Nicholas Loockerman, the pro-

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

genitor of the family in Delaware, of Susannah his wife, of Vincent their son, and of Vincent the younger, are in the Episcopal churchyard at Dover. The inscription on the stone of Nicholas Loockerman, disregarding dates and figures, is as follows: "An affectionate husband, indulgent parent, faithful friend, kind master and a generous neighbour, he was in communion with the Church of England and to his death continued a member of that society."

That on the stone of Vincent, the elder, is: "An affectionate husband, kind parent, faithful friend, kind master and generous neighbour, he was in communion with the Church of England and to his death continued a member of that society."

That of Vincent, the younger: "In public life, his usefulness, in private life, his amiable cordiality in friendship, secured respect and esteem, as a tender and affectionate husband, an indulgent parent, a humane master and a kind neighbour. His memory will be endeared and perpetuated."

Susannah, the faithful wife of Nicholas, is summarized as follows: "She adorned the several important characters of a good wife, kind and affectionate mother, kind mistress, faithful friend, a good neighbour, and fervent Christian and died in communion with the Church of England."

Concerning The Grange, the home of Nicholas Loockerman, first of his family in Delaware, and the life lived there, John Thomas Scharf, in his voluminous History of Delaware, has this to say:

---

LOOCKERMAN HOUSE

---

The tract long known as the Nathaniel Drew Lands was originally warranted to Simon Irons, August 6, 1686, as the Grange, and is described as lying on St. Jones' Creek, joining the northwest part of Berry's Range, containing six hundred acres. This land was sold to Benjamin Shurmer, who transferred it to Andrew Caldwell, who, March 12, 1723, conveyed it to Nicholas Loockerman, who made this his first purchase of land in Kent County. He built a large brick house, forty by fifty feet, two stories high, with an attic. The doors and windows were capped with stone, the cornice was elaborate, the hallway was large and ran through the centre of the house, and the interior was divided into ample and convenient rooms, while the slaves' quarters were a short distance away. Here Mr. Loockerman lived in the easy style of the old-time Southern gentlemen, and here he died and is buried. He built a dam and saw-mill at the head of St. Jones' Creek, northeast of the house, which is mentioned in the same year, 1723. . . .

Nicholas Loockerman married Susan (or Susannah) Emmer-son in 1721, and in 1722, Vincent Loockerman was born. Mrs. Loockerman soon after died, and Nicholas married Esther, daughter of Benjamin Shurmer. The Loockerman burial ground is to the rear of the old mansion-house, surrounded by an iron fence and well shaded.

The old homestead of Nicholas Loockerman is still in preservation, though the landed estate has been divided, and is now known as the Covell place.

---

READ HOUSE

NEW CASTLE, DELAWARE

READ—COUPER—SMITH

---

HE disastrous fire of 1824, which swept New Castle and almost wiped the little city out of existence, destroyed among other beautiful colonial reminders the historic Read mansion which stood on the Strand near Harmony Street. The edifice which stands on its site, however, was built shortly after this unhappy year by George Read, grandson of George Read, the signer, and is so typically Georgian in aspect and so gracious in mass and outline that it may serve to recall some of the charm of its forerunner, as well as to continue the name of the family so long associated with this spot of ground.

The Read mansion which was destroyed was, so contemporary records tell us, one of the finest edifices of its day. It stood in the midst of spacious grounds and was surrounded by venerable trees, tulip, oak and chestnut. In its gardens might be found rare shrubs, as well as the familiar box and other bushes of old England. It was built by John Read, the first of his name in America, and was the birthplace as well as the life-long home of the illustrious George Read, this gentleman's son, author of Delaware's first constitution and one of the two statesmen of America to sign all three of the great documents of the colonies—the address to King George III, of 1774, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States of America. During his occupancy the house was frequently the stopping-place of Washington and the other great figures in our drama of national freedom. He is a figure in the painting by Trumbull in the Capitol at Washington entitled, “The Signing of the Declaration,” and was a member of the Dinner Club of Congress of 1775, whose other members were: Washington, Randolph, Lee, Harrison, of Virginia; Chase, of Maryland; Rodney, of Delaware; and Alsop, of New York.

---

READ HOUSE

---

George Read, II, was born in this departed Read mansion, and so was George Read, III, who built the house now bearing the family name.

In 1844, George Read, IV, removed to Arkansas where he acquired and maintained one of the great cotton plantations of the south. He sold the present Read House to William Couper, a merchant prince of New Castle. William Couper’s granddaughter, Miss Hetty Smith, is now the owner and occupant.

The Read House of to-day is large in size and will attract more than a passing glance to the beautiful Palladian window above the street door. This entrance is approached by a long flight of steps from the street and is remarkable for the exquisite serpentine carving which decorates the arch enclosing it. The garden at the right and in the rear of the house is finely maintained and is a charming retreat.

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

DOVER, DELAWARE

RIDGELY

---

HERE are colonial mansions greater in physical bulk than the Ridgely House at Dover, Delaware, but there is none that looms larger in the perspective of history, considering the enduring interest of the events in which it has been an actor; and there is none more fascinating in its surroundings or more individual and charming in itself.

A sketch of the lives of the men, women and their connections, whom this little old homestead has sheltered or given a focal point for, would be almost a complete outline of the history of the state of Delaware.

The heart of old Dover (as all know who have visited this charming peninsular city) is "the Green," a stretch of turf and trees, two city blocks long, and about half a block wide. It is cut across the middle by an old public road of Delaware, known as "the King's Highway," now one of Dover's chief streets. At the eastern end of "the Green" is the beautiful court-house, capitol of Kent County, one of the three divisions of the state. The other sides of the square are taken up by quaint, low, gossipy brick houses, like the pots in the Rubaiyat, which were built—most of them—in days when Dover was a very young city indeed. In the midst of this reverend gathering, secluded by the shade of the trees of "the Green," stands the Ridgely House.

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

It is fascinating, this ancient home of the Ridgelys—fascinating with a charm that grows.

The walls (of old-fashioned English brick) rise sheer from the pavement, and the heavy cornice only two short stories above you, projects far out over the pavement, forming a shelter from the heaviest rainstorms. The windows on the first floor are so close to the ground that it would be easy to step over the sills from the pavement to the interior of the house.

Perhaps the most striking view of the old home is to be obtained from the east, walking down from the Court-house steps, when the outline of the quaint old chimneys and the broad, sturdy roof, like a beetle's back, are disclosed.

The front door and portico (made over in recent years) have been modelled after the garden doorway of Tulip Hill, the old Galloway homestead at West River, Maryland.

There is but one wing, and this is at the western end of the house. It was used about eighty years ago by Dr. Henry Moore Ridgely as an office, and is entered from the street by a door opening directly on the pavement. Going into the house through the main doorway you find yourself in a square hall beautifully panelled in sturdy oak. At the left is a passage leading to the wing, next to which is a fireplace. Straight ahead runs a passage to the garden, and to the left of this, at the rear of the hall, are the stairs, a very crooked flight indeed, but quaintly and deliciously fashioned. To your right is the entrance to the parlour, a beautiful room with low ceiling and broad, narrow-paned windows.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Among the treasures in the parlour, the discerning old furniture lover will descry a genuine Clementi five-octave piano in splendid preservation. On the wall above it hangs a genuine Copley painting which will interest both antiquarian and art lover, its subject being the beautiful Mary Middleton Vining, mother of a distinguished progeny. Unfortunately the picture has fallen into the restorer's hands, the way of this being as follows: About the middle of the last century the picture became dim and dusty and the family allowed a travelling Philadelphia painter to "restore" it, which he did with customary discouraging results. Yet still the painting retains sufficient of its pristine charm to show the hand of the master who created it. On an adjoining wall is another interesting painting—a Rembrandt Peale—never attacked by hands more impious than those of Father Time, which shows Mary Wynkoop Ridgely as a young girl. In this room, too, is a chair which belonged to William Penn.

Entering the dining-room adjoining, we see a most exquisite old Chippendale table. Our attention will also be attracted by two Sheraton chairs which belonged to Captain Jones, Commander of the Wasp during the War of 1812; an Adam sideboard which through its history brings you into touch with the Lloyd family of Maryland; two chairs which were brought over to this country from England by Thomas Fisher in the Welcome with William Penn; and a rich hoard of old china and silverware, which includes the famous Ridgely silver tea service.

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

In the hall, where we started our journey through the home, is an old Ridgely clock, a grandfatherly relic, still keeping inexorable count of the seconds. The staircase which we have before noted at the back of the hall leads to a beautifully cool and airy second floor. Perhaps this coolness is partly explained by the fact that the house has two roofs (as we are shown in the attic), one roof having been placed above the other many years ago when the first was beginning to give evidence of its struggle with the elements.

The garden of the Ridgely house is one of its most attractive features, yet one that is somewhat discounted to-day by the fact that a hotel has been built on an adjoining property and with its high walls overshadows the quiet gravelled walks and cool box-bushes where the Ridgelys for generations have loved to linger in sultry hours.

After all, however, it is not so much the house that speaks to the visitor as the successive generations of human beings who have given it character. The

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Ridgelys of Delaware, like many other old families of this part of the Union, came to the State from England by way of Maryland. The first Ridgely of whom we have record in the colonies is the Honorable Henry Ridgely, of Annapolis, Maryland, who came from Devonshire, England, in 1659. Just where this Henry Ridgely lived at first we do not know, but he acquired grants of land aggregating nearly six thousand acres, and his eldest son Henry's home was Wardridge, about four miles from Annapolis. Henry Ridgely, the second, married Katherine Greenbury, and his sister married Charles Greenbury, for whose father, Nicholas Greenbury (the first of the name in this country), Greenbury Point, one of the two arms of Annapolis harbour, is named.

Henry Ridgely, the second, was born October 3, 1669, and died March 19, 1699. He had five children—Henry, the third, Nicholas, Charles, Ann, and Elizabeth. Of these Nicholas, born at Wardridge, February 12, 1694, removed to Delaware in 1732, and became the progenitor of the distinguished connection with which we have now to do.

The Ridgely family is conspicuous in both Maryland and Delaware.

The first of the name in Delaware settled at Duck Creek Town and went thence to Dover where he spent the remainder of his life, with the exception of about two years passed shortly after his wedding to Mary

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Middleton Vining in Salem, New Jersey, his wife's home. He was three times married; first, to Sarah, daughter of Col. John Worthington, of Annapolis, Maryland, a distinguished colonial official; after her death in 1721, at the conclusion of ten years of wedded life, he married, December 5, 1723, Ann, daughter of Robert French, of New Castle, Delaware, his second wife dying November 21, 1733; third, he married, December 23, 1736, Mary, daughter of Hugh Middleton, of Salem County, New Jersey, widow of Capt. Benjamin Vining, who survived him. His home place was Eden Hill, about a mile from Dover. He died at home February 16, 1755, and was laid to rest in Christ Church graveyard, Dover, where his tombstone is in good preservation.

At different times in his life Nicholas Ridgely was Treasurer of Kent County and Judge of the Supreme Court of Delaware, and in 1745 was selected to be the guardian of Cæsar Rodney, so conspicuous later in the revolutionary stir, in whom his papers show his great interest and affection.

It is difficult to form a definite conception of the character of Nicholas Ridgely with such slight material to work with after so many years, yet it has been well said that his spirit memorialized itself in three of the most brilliant figures in the history of Delaware—Cæsar Rodney, his ward; United States Senator Charles Ridgely, his son; and John Vining, his step-grandson.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

There are many traditions of the beauty and goodness of Mary Middleton, who was Nicholas Ridgely's third wife. When her first husband was dying he said to her: "I know that you will marry, but you will promise me to make over to our children all of your large estate which you inherited from your father." This promise she gave and kept.

John Vining, one of her children by this marriage, became the first chief justice of the three lower counties, and his daughter Mary was a celebrated belle of revolutionary times.

Of the union of Mary Middleton Vining and Nicholas Ridgely was born Charles Greenbury Ridgely, the first Ridgely occupant of the house in Dover which bears the family name.

Charles Greenbury Ridgely was born at Salem, New Jersey, January 26, 1738, and was educated for the practice of medicine in Philadelphia, under the tuition of Dr. Phineas Bond, who afterwards became his brother-in-law, each having married a daughter of William Moore, of Moore Hall, Pennsylvania. After his graduation from school he took up his residence at his father's home, Eden Hill, near Dover, but his father wishing him to have a larger practice purchased him a home in Dover, the house, substantially unchanged to-day, which we have visited. Concerning the prior history of the house let us consult John Thomas Scharf's invaluable "History of Delaware." Scharf writes:

RIDGELY HOUSE, FROM THE GARDEN

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Mention is made in the deed of Thomas Tarrant of the lot designed for William Hamilton as adjoining his lot on the west. It was not taken by Hamilton, but was sold prior to 1729 to Thomas Parke, who resided there in that year. In the deed of January 30, 1730, to William Rodney he states that the deed from the Commissioners was never recorded. Errors were made in this document which were corrected in the deed of November 2, 1731. In the meantime Rodney sold it, August 17, 1731, to Thomas Skidmore, inn-keeper. A portion of the lot had been reserved, whereon the widow of Thomas Parke lived in 1735.

John Brinckloe, on May 30, 1735, by an article of agreement became owner of this lot, which was not conveyed by deed during the lifetime of Skidmore. After Skidmore's death, May 14, 1760, Daniel Robinson, as administrator of the estate, gave deed to John Brinckloe for the property, who, on the 28th of August, 1760, sold it to Nicholas Lookerman, who, on May 23, 1769, conveyed it to Charles Ridgely, by whose descendants it is still owned. The lot lies east of the Capitol Hotel, and the old house upon it, long known as the Ridgely House, is probably the oldest in Dover. A brick in the building bears the date 1728. Thomas Parke owned the lot at that time, and stated in 1730 that he lived there at that date. The original house contained but two rooms, and was added to on the west end and the rear to its present size by the Ridgelys.

During the troublous days which preceded the Revolution, Charles Greenbury Ridgely was an ardent worker in the cause of the colonies, and was a member of the State Assemblies of 1766, 1767, 1768, 1773, 1774 and 1776. He believed in separation from Great Britain, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Delaware, of 1776.

He married first, June 11, 1761, Mary, daughter of

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Abraham Wynhoop, by whom he had three sons: Abraham, Charles, and Nicholas. Nicholas became Chancellor of Delaware, and is known to-day as the "Father of Chancery" in Delaware. The Chippendale table in the dining-room of the Ridgely House was purchased by him.

Dr. Ridgely's second wife was Ann, daughter of William Moore, of Moore Hall, Pennsylvania, by whom he had five children: Henry Moore, George Wemyss, Mary, Ann, and Wilhelmina. He died November 25, 1785; his wife, December 20, 1810. She was noted for her fine intellectual attainments.

A delightful circle made the Ridgely House its headquarters during the lifetime of Dr. Charles Ridgely, when perhaps the old home knew its most brilliant moments. Conspicuous among those who were everyday figures in its halls was Cæsar Rodney, one of Delaware's most famous sons, whose guardian Nicholas Ridgely was. Incidentally, the old Cæsar Rodney homestead, a sturdy relic of pre-revolutionary building, is still in preservation, about seven miles from Dover, near Delaware Bay.

Concerning the ancestry of Cæsar Rodney we are told in an oration delivered by Honourable Thomas F. Bayard, in 1889, upon the occasion of the unveiling of the Rodney monument in Dover, that---

William Rodney married Alice, the daughter of Sir Thomas Cæsar, an eminent merchant of the city of London, and his son

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

William died near Dover, Delaware, in the year 1708, leaving eight children and a considerable landed estate which was entailed and by the decease of the elder sons finally vested in his youngest son, Cæsar, who continued his residence as a landed proprietor in Delaware until his death in 1745. Cæsar Rodney, the eldest son of Cæsar and grandson of William Rodney, was born in St. Jones' Neck, near Dover, Kent County, Delaware, in the year 1728.

Mr. Ridgely caused his ward to be instructed in the classics and general literature and in the accomplishments of fencing and dancing, to fit his bearing and manners becomingly to the station of life in which he was born.

We have a picture of the young man preserved in the letters of Thomas Rodney, his brother: "He was about five feet, ten inches high. His person was very elegant and genteel, his manners graceful, easy and polite. He had a good fund of humour and the happiest talent in the world for making his wit agreeable." Which last, George Meredith might have added a whole paragraph to his definition to tell us, is the finest flower of "wisdom's lightning."

From the pen of this same felicitous Rodney we have a good description of the life of the times:

Almost every family manufactured its own clothes; and beef, pork, poultry, milk, butter, cheese, wheat and Indian corn were raised for food; cider, small beer and peach and apple brandy were for drink. The best families in the county seldom used tea, coffee, chocolate or sugar, and honey was their sweetening. . . . They seemed to live as it were in concord, for they constantly associated together at one house or another in considerable numbers to play and frolic, at which times the young people would dance and the elder ones wrestle, run, hop, or jump, or throw the disc, or play at some rustic and manly exercises.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

On Christmas Eve there was a universal firing of guns, travelling round from house to house, during the holiday, and all winter long there was a continual frolic, shooting-matches, twelfth-cake, and so on. . . .

In this lively atmosphere Cæsar Rodney grew up to be a beloved and respected figure. Political honours were showered upon him; when barely thirty years of age he was high sheriff of his native county of Kent and two years later a judge of the lower courts. In 1765 he entered upon that which was to be the absorbing passion of his life by being elected a member of the "Stamp Act Congress," which convened in New York City in that year. As a member of the Delaware Legislature, in 1766, he threw all of his influence into an effort to stop the importation of slaves into the state.

It was while life seemed to have opened most fully before him and the skies were clearest that the shadow of calamity fell upon him. When about forty years of age he discovered the presence of a malady of the nose, which, on examination by Doctor Bond, of Philadelphia, was diagnosed as cancer, and he put himself in the hands of this physician for treatment. Even at this writing there is no certain resource for the cure of this dreadful affliction. The use of the surgeon's knife was then, as now, the only palliative, so the tortured man submitted to operation after operation through the rest of his life without gaining permanent relief.

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

In 1769 he was Speaker of the Colonial Assembly, and in 1774 and 1776 was a deputy to the Continental Congress called to order in Philadelphia. Mr. Bayard says of him at this time:

He was a man of action in an era of action; born not out of his proper time, but in it, and being fitted for the hour and its work, he did it well. He was recognized and naturally at once became influential and impressive—distinguished for the qualities which were needed in the days in which he lived on earth. Moved by patriotic impulse, he had counselled the election of Washington as commander-in-chief of the colonial forces, and from the beginning to the end of the conflict sought to hold up his hands and sustain him at all times and in all ways.

Perhaps the most heroic exploit of Cæsar Rodney's life was his dramatic ride from the extreme southern end of Delaware to Philadelphia to be in time to break the tie vote which kept his state from joining her sisters in making the Declaration of Independence the unanimous expression of the United Colonies of America in Congress assembled. Richard Henry Lee's immortal resolution was offered on June 7, and was passed in secret session by six out of seven states on June 8. Rodney was at home working with his people to strengthen the cause of liberty. Thomas McKean voted for the resolution, and George Read voted against it. At a second ballot on July 1, nine colonies favored the motion, two were against it, and Delaware was neutral as before. McKean sent a messenger in search of Rodney with instructions to bid him make all haste to be at the Assembly on July 4, when a final ballot was to be taken. In his address before mentioned, Mr. Bayard expresses the opinion that Rodney was at one of his farms, but writings preserved by the Ridgely family seem to point to a different conclusion. They say:

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

A celebrity of Lewes, the old seaport of Delaware, was Sarah Rowland, who according to tradition almost prevented the Declaration of Independence from having the necessary number of signers.

She was a beautiful Tory, for in the first years of the Revolutionary War there were many friends of England in the lower part of this peninsula. The news of a Tory uprising in Sussex County and Maryland reaching Caesar Rodney, who was attending the delegates' convention in Philadelphia, he immediately mounted his horse and went thundering down the state, using threats and persuasion all along the road. While at Lewes, the beautiful Sarah so infatuated him by her charms that he lingered longer than his business required, and was only aroused to a sense of his delinquencies when he was presented by a loyal servant-girl in the Rowland household with a number of letters which had been intercepted by his enchantress. Then it was that he made his famous ride to Philadelphia.

All one hot July day, Rodney, then in broken health, rode through Delaware and lower Pennsylvania. On the morning of July 4, he appeared at the State House door in his boots and spurs as the members were assembling. When the call came for the vote of Delaware, he arose composedly, and said:

“As I believe the voice of my constituents and of all

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

sensible and honest men is in favor of independence, my own judgment concurs with them. I vote for independence."

He lived to see peace established by a definite treaty (signed in 1783), and died in June, 1784, the victim of the malady which had broken the happiness of the last sixteen years of his life.

Though we find Rodney at the home of the fascinating Sarah Rowland on the eve of his immortal ride, the romance of his life is bound up with the name of Mary Vining, of Dover, afterwards Mrs. Charles Ingles. There is preserved to the present day and copied in the American Historical Register, of July, 1895, a letter from Rodney to Miss Vining in his own hand, which gives the secret of his heart, as follows:

Yesterday evening (by Mr. Chew's Tom) I had the unwelcome and unexpected news of your determining to go to Philadelphia with Mr. and Misses Chew. If you remember, as we were riding to Noyontown Fair, you talked of taking this journey and mentioned my going with you; you know how readily I (the letter is torn here) . . . and how willing in this as in everything else I was to oblige and serve you. . . . When I was last down, you seemed to have given over all thoughts of going. This determined me and accordingly gave Mr. Chew for answer that he might not expect me with him; thereby I'm deprived of the greatest pleasure this world could possibly afford me—the company of that lady in whom all happiness is placed. . . . Molly, I love you from my soul! In this believe me I'm sincere and honest; but when I think of the many amiable qualifications you are possessed of, all my hopes are at an end—nevertheless intended (torn) . . . down this week and as far as possible to have known my fate. . . . You may expect to see me at your return. Till then, God bless you.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

I'm Yrs.,

The "Mr. Chew" mentioned here is that Judge Chew, of Delaware, known as the "fighting Quaker," who afterwards removed to Germantown, Pennsylvania, and built the colonial mansion, still standing, known as Cliveden. Of him there is the following couplet:

Immortal Chew first set our Quakers right;
He made it plain they might resist and fight;
And the gravest Dons agreed to what he said,
And freely gave their cast for the King's aid,
For war successful, and for peace and trade.

The Mary Vining who was so ardently beloved by Rodney married Charles Ingles, a clergyman, and died shortly after her wedding. She was aunt to a younger Mary Vining, daughter of her brother John, and granddaughter of Nicholas Ridgely's third wife, Mary Middleton Vining, who was destined to create far wider havoc in men's hearts. This was that belle of the revolutionary period, the fame of whose beauty and cleverness aroused even Marie Antoinette's curiosity in far France. A charmingly written memoir of her life by Mrs. Henry Geddes Banning, a descendant of Thomas Rodney, Cæsar Rodney's brother and executor, has appeared in the American Historical Register.

She tells us:

PARLOR CORNER IN RIDGELY HOUSE

The painting shown is that of Mary Middleton Vining

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Thomas Jefferson when minister plenipotentiary to France, was proud to assure the lovely young Queen of France that the extravagant admiration of the Delaware belle by the French officers which had reached her ears was no exaggeration, for the American lady was worthy of it all. Marie Antoinette replied that she would be glad to see her at the Tuileries.

Her birth is thus recorded in the Vining family Bible:

Mary Vining, the daughter of Chief Justice John Vining and Phoebe Wynhoop, was born at his house near Dover, on Saturday, the 20th day of August, 1756, at four of the clock, in the morning, in the presence of Robana Powell (midwife), Mrs. Mary Wynhoop, and Mrs. Mary Ridgely, and was christened on the 5th day of September following by the Rev. Hugh Niel, missionary for Dover in Kent County.

She was born to great wealth, and could and did indulge herself in many caprices of a luxurious imagination. Never to be seen walking on the street, but invariably riding, was one of her amiable affectations until financial reverses caused an upset in this, as in other arrangements of life. Another of her fancies was to partly conceal her face with a fan or veil. In old age she wore a ruffle on her cap that reached her eyebrows and completely covered her cheeks.

There is but one portrait of Mary Vining in existence, a miniature, now preserved in the Ridgely House, and this hardly seems to do her justice. Perfectly fashioned, vivacious, with beautiful eyes, and with the personal magnetism for which her family was conspicuous, it is not hard to understand her vogue. Of this, an instance: When the British evacuated Philadelphia in 1778, an officer ran the risk of court-martial for absence without leave to make the hazardous journey to Wilmington to see Mary Vining and persuade her to cancel her previous rejection of his love. In one way he was lucky, as his escapade remained undiscovered, but in another way he was not, for his charmer's heart remained undisturbed.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Among the distinguished men who were her guests at her home in Wilmington were the Duke de Liancourt, the Duke d'Orleans, and the late king of the French, Louis Philippe. She numbered General Lafayette among her friends, and corresponded with him until her death.

The romance of Miss Vining's life is connected with the name of "Mad Anthony" Wayne, who stormed Stony Point instead of Hell! After surviving the sieges of the most polished and brilliant men who came to the New World, our beauty at last succumbed to the fascinations of this rough son of Mars. The engagement excited great comment in the circle in which she moved. In a letter, still extant, written by Mrs. Cadwalader (widow of the revolutionary general) and addressed to her aunt, Mrs. Charles Ridgely (née Moore), a paragraph reads: "Is it true Miss Vining is engaged to General Wayne? Can one so refined marry this coarse soldier? True, he is brave, wonderfully brave, and none but the brave deserve the fair."

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Preparations for the wedding were being merrily made, and Miss Vining had bought silver for house-keeping when news of the death of her fiancé at Presque Isle, Lake Erie, December 15, 1796, was heralded. Mrs. Cadwalader writes: "Miss Vining has put on mourning and retired from the world in consequence of General Wayne's death."

Among the gifts which General Wayne gave his fiancée in thought of their approaching felicity was a set of china. Miss Vining could never bring herself to use it after his death, and it is now preserved entire in the Ridgely House, a pathetic and beautiful memorial of this beautiful, socially brilliant woman and her virile soldier lover.

When Cæsar Rodney (the signer) was elected Governor of Delaware in 1777 or 1778, he took a house in Wilmington, and asked Miss Vining, his young cousin, to preside at his table. (The location of this house was at 606 Market Street.) There is suggestion of romance here—at last, one of the name became mistress of his house! Here she entertained the prominent men of the day as her cousin's guests. In the cellar of the house Lafayette stored little casks of gold wherewith to pay his troopers and help the cause of freedom.

After the death of General Wayne, Miss Vining

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

never again ventured into society, though she lived twenty-five years longer, and she but once left the seclusion of her home in Wilmington to go to another city. This was when in the winter of 1808 or 1809, she spent two weeks in Philadelphia at the house of C. A. Rodney, Esq., nephew of the signer. Once again, then, she conversed with her friends, and it is recorded that her manners, if subdued, retained their charm and her talk still shone as of old. As the years rolled by, she became sensitive to the inroads of time, and received her family and the very few intimate friends she retained in a darkened room. Her abundant brown hair never turned gray. When the cap, without which she was never to be seen, was removed after her death, a high, white, very smooth forehead was revealed. She died in 1821, and was laid to rest on Good Friday, almost all of Wilmington attending the simple burial services.

After Miss Vining's death, her only surviving nephew, William Henry Vining, took charge of her papers, packed them securely, and placed them for safe keeping in the garret of his aunt, Mrs. Ogden, of Wilmington. Some years later Mrs. Ogden's home was attacked by fire, and these papers, among which was a manuscript history of the Revolutionary War on which Miss Vining had spent her declining years, were completely destroyed. William Henry Vining died without issue, and was the last of his name and race. About fifty years ago, the tombstones of the

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Vining family in the Episcopal churchyard in Dover were stolen by vandals and pounded into dust to make mortar, as if—Mrs. Banning calls to our attention—fate were determined to obliterate the very name off the earth.

Henry Moore Ridgely, son of Charles Greenway Ridgely's second marriage, and second Ridgely master of the Ridgely House, was born August 6, 1779, in the house in which he died, graduated at Dickinson College, and studied law with his relative, Charles Smith, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He returned to Dover to practise his profession, and about the time he was admitted to the bar became involved in a duel, which nearly resulted in his losing his life. Dr. Barrett, of Dover, had been grossly insulted by a Mr. Shields, of Wilmington, and, in accordance with the spirit of the times, sought redress for the injury to his dignity through the code, and desiring a second, asked Ridgely to serve, which the latter agreed to do. Shields refused to meet Dr. Barrett, but challenged Ridgely instead. The latter fought the duel, was severely wounded, and for a time it was thought that he could not live, though eventually he regained full strength after a long and painful prostration. Public feeling was so much aroused against Shields that he was obliged to leave Wilmington, never to return.

In Ridgely's case, however, this painful experience was but the prelude to a peaceful and happy career as a lawyer and public servant in his home town. Apparently he cared little for public office for the sake of pure glamour of position, as at different times he refused the chancellorship of Delaware, and the chief-justiceship, yet accepted the comparatively unimportant post of levy court commissioner of Kent County, and by his patient, devoted efforts restored the offices of the county to an orderly condition. When he found that there was mismanagement of the county alms-house, he requested to be made trustee, and by untiring labour made this institution a sound and self-respecting body.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

He married, first, November 21, 1803, Sarah, daughter of John Banning and Elizabeth Alford. She died January 14, 1837, and he married, March 17, 1842, Sarah Ann, daughter of Governor Cornelius Comegys, of Dover, who survived him. He died in 1847 on his birthday.

Not long before Mr. Ridgely's death, he was the centre of a disturbance almost as violent as the duel which ushered in his public life. It was advertised in Dover that Lucretia Mott, the celebrated abolitionist woman speaker, was to make an address, and as feeling ran high in the little town against abolition, there was talk of doing the speaker violence. Mr. Ridgely, hearing this, took her into his own home, and entertained her as a guest, "not," he explained, "because I like the abolitionists, but because I will not see any woman ill-treated in Dover." When the time came for the lecture, he escorted her to the hall, despite black looks and threatening words, and sat beside her on the stage as she spoke.

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

Strangely enough, Lucretia Mott did not touch the theme of her passion at all. She spoke, not of Abolition, but of Art, and that quite charmingly.

When the little party returned to Mr. Ridgely's house it was followed by an ugly, angry crowd. The master of the house would not let the shutters be closed over the quaint, staring old windows, nor the heavy, old-fashioned front door be barred. In plain sight from the pavement, he stood in the parlour with his back to the fire, and conversed with his guest.

Still more hangs to this visit of Lucretia Mott's according to family tradition than a good yarn. There were at this time two suitors contending for the hand of Ann Ridgely, one of the daughters of the house, and both were present this adventurous evening. Miss Mott had the ill-fortune to mistake empty air for a chair, as we have all done at least once in our careers, and to her great embarrassment sat down on the floor. One of the rivals for the fair Ann's hand laughed; the other rushed forward to the stricken lady's assistance. This latter it was to whom the daughter of the house gave her hand, and thus it was that on May 11, 1841, she was married to Charles Irenee du Pont, a member of a distinguished Delaware family.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Around the name of Sarah Banning, Mr. Ridgely's first wife, many traditions cling, full of old Delaware names and events. Her mother was Elizabeth Alford, the beautiful young widow of Mr. Cassius, so fair, indeed, that a distinguished French traveller said that she was the most beautiful woman he had ever seen in Europe or America. Philip and Charity Alford, Elizabeth's parents, came from the West India Islands, and settled on Second Street in Philadelphia. The former was engaged in business between that city and Barbadoes, and was lost at sea during one of his voyages between the two ports. His widow moved to Dover. Among the legends connected with their life in the West Indies is one stating that the mother of Charity Alford fell into a trance and was mistaken for dead. Every arrangement was made for her funeral, but, owing to the absence in an adjoining island of a daughter, the body was kept until this latter could arrive. When they were about to place the lid upon the casket, signs of life were found, and eventually the supposed corpse proved to be alive. To commemorate this event, on every anniversary she would go with her children to the graveyard and take tea upon her tombstone!

Of the fifteen children of Henry Moore Ridgely, six survived him. Charles George, born August 12, 1804, graduated from West Point, was professor of French there, and died July 15, 1844. Elizabeth, born

---

RIDGELY HOUSE

---

February 27, 1813, was a great beauty and early matured into womanhood, having at fifteen all the grace and ease of manner of a girl of twenty. She was educated at Madame Grelland's in Philadelphia, and was a noted belle in Washington while her father was United States Senator. Her sudden death in 1833, in the bloom of womanhood, was a great shock to her family and a blow to her many admirers. Ann, born February 21, 1815, had light hair and a fair complexion, and because of her fine intellectual gifts was the pride of her father, who educated her himself entirely at home. At the age of twelve, she had read all of Shakespeare, Chapman's "Homer" and Dryden's "Virgil," and was familiar with the classics and modern poets. The circumstances have been related of her marriage to Charles Irenee du Pont, son of Victor du Pont and his wife, Gabrielle Josephine la Pitte de Pelleporte du Pont. A daughter of this marriage, Amelia Elizabeth, married, July 5, 1866, her cousin, Eugene du Pont, son of Alexis P. and Johanna du Pont, and had issue: Ann Ridgely, Alexis Prene, Eugene, Amy Elizabeth, Julia Sophia, and Ann, who married June 26, 1894, William C. Peyton, of Santa Cruz, California.

Ann Ridgely, wife of Charles Irenee du Pont, died after a lingering illness at her home in Wilmington, October 20, 1898, in the eighty-third year of her age, and was buried in the du Pont cemetery on the banks of the Brandywine.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Henry, another son of Henry Moore Ridgely, born April 15, 1817, married Virginia Jenkins, and had the following children: Nicholas, born December 13, 1820, married Mary H. Tilden, and had issue: Eugene, born May 4, 1822, married Mary A. Mifflin, of Philadelphia; Wilhemina Moore, born May 27, 1827, married Alexander Johnson; Edward, born January 30, 1831, married Elizabeth Comegys, and had issue; Harriet, who married Dr. D. A. Harrison; Edward, who died young; Sarah; and Henry, who married Mabel Lloyd Fisher.

Henry Ridgely, Jr., a son of this last union, and seventh in descent from the founder of the family, is the present occupant of the Ridgely House, of Dover, and continues the family tradition of either law or medicine by being a follower of the former profession.

---

STEWART HOUSE

NEW CASTLE, DELAWARE

VAN DYKE—DU PONT—JANVIER—LAMBSON—STEWART

---

CROSS Delaware Avenue from the Amstel House, New Castle, Delaware, is the David Stewart House, a quaint and charming old mansion built by Governor Van Dyke for his son, Senator Van Dyke, about the beginning of the nineteenth century. It is three stories in height and the front doorway is approached by a high flight of brownstone steps. Dr. David Stewart, the present owner and occupant, is the fifth of his name in New Castle and the fifth of his name to be a physician.

The house is simple in exterior and is more attractive for its charm of aspect than for pretension of size or design. The rooms of the interior have lofty ceilings, are well lighted and have good proportions. Downstairs there is a quantity of fine wood-carving in a floral design, especially in the dining-room. A broad hall runs from the front door to the back of the house.

Senator Van Dyke, for whom the mansion was built, was born in 1770 in his father's home, the Amstel House. He was educated in Philadelphia and studied law in the office of Chief Justice Kensey Johns. Though an attorney by profession he was a public man by avocation, and spoke for his state in the Halls of Congress for many years. He died in 1826 on the eve of reelection to the United States Senate. Contemporary records of him and traditions speak of him as a man of most delightful personality, known for the charm of his manner and his fine intellectual attainments.

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Upon the death of Senator Van Dyke, the home fell to the lot of his daughter, Dorcas, who married Charles Irenee Du Pont. Dorcas' sister, Susannah, married Dr. David Stewart, the grandfather of the present occupant.

From the family of Charles I. DuPont the mansion passed by purchase in 1856 to George Janvier, Esq., whose name is to be associated with the early days of transportation in Delaware, records of Delaware frequently speaking of Janvier's "Union Line" of coaches and boats which bore passengers from New Castle and Wilmington to Philadelphia. About twenty years later the house was sold by Mrs. Mary Janvier, widow of George Janvier, to Mrs. Hannah M. Lambson, who shortly sold to the present owner, Dr. David Stewart.

The first David Stewart in New Castle was the donor of the ground on which Saint George's Presbyterian church was established, and ever since his day there has been a Dr. David Stewart who was ruling elder of the congregation. The present Dr. David Stewart has a son, David, who married Louise McIlvaine and a grandson of the family patronymic. His other children are Dorothy, Henry Van Dyke, and Ruth Elizabeth (Stewart).

ENTRANCE TO THOMAS HOUSE

---

THOMAS HOUSE

NEW CASTLE, DELAWARE

THOMAS—READ—THOMAS

---

HE Thomas House at the intersection of Harmony Street and the Strand, New Castle, Delaware, is of value not only for its own intrinsic charm but for its association with families which have done much for the state of Delaware and for the nation. It was built by Dr. William W. Thomas about the beginning of the nineteenth century and gains interest from having long been the home of Mr. William Thompson Read, a grandson of George Read, the signer, who married Miss Sallie Latimer Thomas, a daughter of the builder.

The house is three stories in height and is rather narrow for its height. It overlooks the low roofs of the little houses which make up the opposite side of the Strand and has thus a wide view of the Delaware River and the water-front of the historic little city in which it is situated. Perhaps the most distinguished single feature is the doorway on Harmony Street, which, while simple in design, is remarkable for the intricate and beautifully executed carving with which it is adorned.

William Thompson Read was born August 22, 1792, the son of George Read, the second, and his wife Mary

---

COLONIAL MANSIONS OF DELAWARE

---

Thompson (Read), daughter of Gen. William Thompson, of near Carlisle, Pennsylvania. A lawyer by profession, he had rare social gifts and was known for his charm of manner. He was Grand Master of the Masons of Delaware and was one of the founders of the Delaware Historical Society. After his death in 1873, the house passed to his wife's niece, Miss Eliza Thomas, who at her decease in recent years left it to the Episcopal church at New Castle to be used as a Parish house.

---

INDEX

---

- Acosta, 127
Acquasco, 10
Addison, 67
Alford, 286, 288
American Historical Register, 279, 280
Amstel House, 247, 249, 291
Anderson, 165
Andrews, 100
Annapolis, 3, 4, 5, 6, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 37, 38, 42, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 58, 60, 61, 65, 68, 70, 72, 78, 76, 77, 83, 89, 101, 107, 116, 117, 118, 166, 167, 168, 170, 174, 177, 179, 180, 181, 188, 191, 201, 202, 204, 218, 219, 222, 243
Anne Arundel, 35, 76, 101, 108, 109, 113, 138, 144, 152, 153, 218
Anne, Queen of England, 225
Archbishop of Baltimore, 118
Armstrong, 212
Assembly, 158
Association of Freemen, 208
Athens of America, 166
Avalon, 166, 171

Bald Eagles, 10
Baldwin, 23, 108
Ball, 128
Baltimore Co., 125, 131, 133, 216, 218, 219
Baltimore, Lord, 51, 82, 83, 84, 85, 115, 116, 118, 156, 162, 184, 186, 188, 197, 198, 204, 212, 237
Bancroft, 139
Banning, 280, 285, 286, 288
Barrett, 285
Bayard, 259
Beane, 188

Belair, 199, 200, 201, 202
Belmont, 10, 166, 168, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 179, 180, 182
Belmont Hall, 10
Belvidere, 122
Belvoir, 218, 219, 220, 223, 224
Bennett, 207
Berkeley Co., 182
Berry's Range, 263
Best, 47
Beverly, 232, 234
Bird, 104
Birmingham, 8, 89, 101, 102, 103, 104
Birnie, 70
Biscoe, 191, 198, 196
Bishop of Maryland, 33
Black, 125, 126
Bladen, 203
Bladensburg, 48, 49
Blake, 129, 205, 208
Blakeford, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210
Blakeman, 88, 95
Bland, 36, 42
"Bloody Buoy," 181
Bloomfield, 217
Bloomingdale, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215
Boarman, 104, 242
Bogardus, 258
Bolling, 96, 100
Bonaparte, 123, 124
Bond, 238, 244, 272, 276
Booker, 255
Bordley, 40, 72, 73
Roswell, 84
Boucher, 65
Bowen, 236
Bowie, 94, 199, 202
Bowles, 235, 236, 237

INDEX

Bowles' Separation, 237
 Bradford, 261
 Brandywine, 180, 289
 Brent, 118
 Brewster, 182
 Brice, 31, 36, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 72,
     108, 187, 220
 Brice House, 36, 45, 48, 50, 59, 72
 Brinckloe, 273
 Briscoe, 10, 235, 289
 "British Architects, or Builders Treasury," 5
 British Museum, 5
 Broad Neck, 242
 Brooke, 102, 116, 118
 Brookefield, 10
 Brown, 108
 Buchanan, 173
 Buckley, 76
 Bulfinch, 16
 Burleigh, 105, 106, 107, 109
 Burnham, 249
 Bushby Park, 99

 Cæsar, 274
 Cadwalader, 252, 283
 Calle, 147
 Caldwell, 263
 Callahan, 85
 Calvert, 63, 153, 184, 186, 187, 188,
     189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 196,
     198, 287
 Cambridge, 87
 Capitol Hotel, 278
 Capron, 93, 94
 Cardinal Gibbons, 119
 Carnan, 133
 Carroll, 65, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114,
     115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121,
     122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 129,
     130

Carroll Mansion, 116, 117, 121
 Carroll Park, 130
 Carrollton, 65, 110, 113, 114, 117,
     120, 121
 Carter, 193, 203
 Carvel, 18
 Caton, 123, 124, 125
 Catonsville, 123
 Cecil Co., 118, 142
 Cedar Park, 144, 145, 146, 147
 Chadwick, 183
 Chamberlaine, 150, 189, 225, 226,
     227, 229, 231
 Chancellors Hope, 10
 Chaptico, 240, 244
 Charles I, 107, 108
 Charles II, 115, 198, 232
 Charles Co., 10, 178, 179, 241
 Chase, 6, 7, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22,
     23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 35, 36,
     66, 180, 220, 265
 Chase House, 15, 23, 24, 25, 27, 33, 35, 36
 Cherokee Indians, 62
 Chesapeake Bay, 1, 15, 78, 140, 166, 211, 278
 Chesterfield, 203
 Chester River, 161, 162, 205, 208
 Chestertown, 142, 209
 Cheston, 141, 142, 146
 Cheston-on-Wye, 210
 Chew, 38, 39, 43, 121, 122, 127, 141, 142, 220, 279, 280
 Chollar, 95
 Christ Church graveyard, 271
 Church of England, 20, 269
 Cincinnati, Society of, 41
 Claiborne, 206
 Clark, 137
 Claude, 68, 71, 221
 Clay, 176

INDEX

- Cleveland, Pres., 159
 Clivedon, 39, 122, 141, 280
 Closson, 34
 Clynmalyra, 114
 Coale, 101
 Coates, 104, 243
 Cobbett, 181
 Coburn, 228, 229
 College of Phila., 180
 Colonial Dames, 224
 Comegys, 286, 290
 Committee of Safety, 107
 Conrad, 216, 218
 Constitutional Convention of Del., 273
 Contee, 96, 99, 100, 179, 180, 183
 Continental Army, 242
 Continental Assembly, 40
 Continental Congress, 23, 42, 158,
     179, 182
 Cole, 58
 Colston, 182
 Cookson, 141
 Corbit House, 11
 Councilman, 217
 Couper, 264, 265
 "Coursey's Neck," 207, 208
 Couwenhoven, 259
 Covell Place, 268
 Covington, 156, 157
 Cowgill House, 10
 Cowman, 101, 102
 Crabbe, 102
 Cremona, 244
 Cromwell, 100, 109
 Croome, 184, 189
 Crosladore, 251, 252
 Culbreth, 261
 Cumberland, 240
 Custis, 65, 66, 184, 190, 191, 192
 Dairy Farm, 10
 Darnall, 116, 119, 121, 189
 David Stewart House, 291
 Davis, 76, 95
 Davitz, 259
 Declaration of Independence, 23 36,
     120, 121, 220, 249, 265, 277, 278
 De Courcy, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209,
     210, 214
 Deep Falls, 240, 241, 242, 243
 De Kay, 259
 Delaware Bay, 3, 251
 Delaware R., 177, 293
 Dennis, 232, 284
 Dickinson, 251, 252, 253, 254
 Dickinson College, 252, 285
 Dickinson House, 251, 253
 Dieudonne, 49
 Digges, 188
 Dinner Club of Congress, 265
 Discovery, 150
 D. of C., 159
 Donaldson, 174
 Dorchester Co., 10, 147
 Dorsey, 36, 77, 183, 134, 166, 168,
     169, 171, 172, 173, 174, 180, 220 ✓
 Dougherty, 126
 Doughoregan Manor, 110, 112, 113,
     117, 118, 119, 121, 123, 124, 126,
     127, 128, 129
 Douglass, 158, 159, 160
 Dover, 4, 257, 258, 260, 261, 266, 270,
     272, 274, 279, 281, 285, 286, 287,
     288, 290
 Drummond, 209
 Dublin U., 69
 Duck Creek Town, 270
 Duddington, 116
 Dudley, 211, 213, 215
 Dulany, 183

INDEX

du Pont, 287, 289, 291, 292
Duvall, 184, 190, 196, 198

Eagle's Nest Bay, 220
Easterday, 104
Eastern Shore, 148, 153, 157, 161, 208, 209, 210, 225
Easton, 148, 164, 251, 260
Eddis, 52, 56, 83
Eden, 40, 69, 86
Eden Hill, 271, 272
Edgar, 62
Elizabeth, Queen, 178
Elizabeth River, 152
Elk Ridge, 166, 167, 169, 172, 173
Ellenborough, 10
Ellicott City, 105, 110
Ely O'Carroll, 114
Emerson, 125, 260
L'Enfant, 197, 198
Enfield Chase, 114
"Entailed Hat, The," 11
Episcopal Church, 33, 180, 262, 285
Essex, Earl of, 208
Essex, Lady, 61
Expectation, 221

Fairfax, 97, 99
Fairlands, 104
"Father of Chancery," 274
Federal Constitution, 158
"Federal Republican," 181
Fenwick's Manor, 237
Finney, 151
Fisher, 50, 269, 290
Fitzhugh, 192, 220, 238
Five Nations, 207
Folly Quarter, 125, 126
Fontainebleau, 62
Forrest, 238
Fort Washington, 179

Fox, 62
Franklin, 25, 173
Frederick, 105, 110, 112, 182
Frederick Co., 66, 69, 115, 182
Frederick, Prince, 204
French, 271
Friends, 140, 141, 142, 146, 147, 225
Galloway, 101, 138, 141, 142, 144,
146, 147
Garst, 34
George III, 204
Georgetown College, 128
Gibbons, 112
Gibson, 74, 148, 151
Giles, 23
Girard College, 247
Glyndon, 216
Goldsborough, 67
Goodwin, 173
Gordon, 182, 187
Grange, The, 260
Grason, 33
Green, 56, 58, 59
Green, The, 266, 267
Greenberry, 86, 221, 270
Greenberry Forest, 221
Greenberry Point, 270
Green Spring Valley, 125, 222
Grelland's, 269
Grosvenor, 181

Habersham, 71
Halifax Co., 177
Hall, 9, 10, 35, 108
Hamilton, 273
Hammond, 15, 19, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31,
32, 33, 36, 40, 88, 89, 103, 107, 108,
109, 173, 188, 218, 220
Hammond House, 15, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 89

INDEX

- Hampton, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135,
 136, 137, 173, 180
 Hancock, 120
 Hanson, 109, 135, 166, 174, 175, 176,
 177, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183
 Hanson's Laws, 180
 Hardcastle, 225, 231
 Harford Co., 39
 Harper, 124, 182
 Harris, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215
 Harris' Mill, 212
 Harrison, 290
 Harvard Law School, 128
 Harwood, 15, 24, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35
 Hathaway, 148, 151
 Hatton, 116, 178
 Hatton Hall, 178
 Hawkins, 183, 244
 Hay, 9, 247, 248, 249, 250
 Heath, 218
 Hemsley Farm, 215
 Henrietta Maria, Queen, 129, 155
 Henry I, King, 226
 Herbert, 90, 96, 109
 Herman, 258
 Hermitage, 138
 Herrington, 38
 Hervey, 124
 Hill, 93, 94, 168, 170
 His Lordship's Kindness, 188
 Hobbs, 33
 Hockley-in-the-Hole, 169, 170, 171
 Hollyday, 148, 149, 150, 157, 161,
 162, 163, 164
 Homestead, 123
 Homewood, 122, 123, 127
 Hood, 21, 218, 219
 Hood's Mill, 218
 Hooft, 93, 96, 97, 100, 109
 Hopkins, 103
 Honeywood, 182
 House of Burgesses, 49, 152
 Howard, 1, 9, 122, 184, 135, 136, 180,
 220, 221
 Howard Co., 11, 23, 67, 76, 99, 104,
 105, 108, 110, 113, 124, 125, 166
 Howard's Pasture, 221
 Hudson River, 259
 Hughes, 138, 148, 194
 "Hundred of Leyland," 220, 221
 Hungerford, 194
 Husting, 21
 Hyatt, 10
 Hyde, 188, 189

 Ilchester, Earl of, 62
 Indian Town, 161
 Ingles, 279, 280
 Ingraham, 252
 Irons, 263
 Iroquois, 207
 Isham, 182
 Ivy Neck, 143

 Jackson, 21, 252
 Jacobins, 181
 James I, 107
 Jamestown, 38
 Jansen, 258
 Janvier, 291, 292
 Jefferson, 209, 281
 Jenifer, 65, 66
 Jennings, 45, 47, 48, 101
 Jenkins, 88, 93, 94, 95, 290
 Johns, 1, 255, 291
 Johns Hopkins, 122, 289, 255
 Johnson, 84
 Jones, 269
 Joppa, 218
 Judkins, 194

INDEX

- Kay, 183
 Kennedy, 36, 42
 Kenssey Johns House, 255
 Kent Co., Delaware, 251, 252, 253, 263, 266, 271, 274, 275, 276, 281, 286
 Kent Co., Md., 161, 207, 209
 Kent Island, 178
 Ketin, 260
 Key, 10, 68, 70, 71, 219, 224, 238
 King's Highway, 266
 King Williams School, 52
 Knapp, 76
 Kneller, 82
 Knickerbocker, 258

 Lafayette, Marquis de, 172, 282, 283
 Lambson, 291, 292
 Langdon, 128
 Latrobe, 121
 Laurel, 88, 101, 103, 167
 Laurel Hill Cemetery, 261
 Lawrence, 146
 Lee, 127, 183, 193, 198
 Lee House, 10
 Lehr, 216, 217, 218
 Lewes, 278
 Lewis, 192
 Liancourt, 282
 Ligon, 67
 Lingan, 183
 Lippincott's Magazine, 48
 Litterlouna, 114
 Lloyd, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 28, 29, 35, 38, 65, 129, 134, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 161, 162, 164, 165, 227, 269
 Lockerman or Loockerman, 27, 28, 31, 33, 34, 35, 231, 257, 258, 260, 260, 261, 262, 263, 273
 Loockerman House, 257, 258
 Logan, 253
 Long Run, 208
 Lord High Chancellor, 178
 Love, 83, 84
 Lowe's Addition, 221
 Lowndes, 202

 Maconchie, 178
 MacTavish, 125, 126
 McCarty, 58
 McCawley, 102
 McDowell, 181
 McFadon, 108
 McIlvaine, 292
 Madison, 108
 Magruder, 202
 Maidstone, 38
 Markoe, 138, 142
 Marlborough, Duchess of, 45, 47
 Marlborough, Duke of, 40
 Marshall, 99
 Martin, 39, 49
 Maryland Gazette, 52, 56, 58, 85, 187
 Maryland Journal and Advertiser, 186
 Masons, Grand Master of, 294
 Maltaponi, 10
 Maxcey, 138, 142
 Mayer, 103
 Mayflower, 182
 Maynadler, 219, 220
 Meredith, 275
 Meredith Cove, 78
 Methodists, 133
 Mifflin, 74, 280
 Minute Men, 209
 Mohawk Indians, 259
 Montmorenci, 9, 216, 217, 218

INDEX

- Montpelier, 68, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93,
 94, 99, 102, 104
 Moody, 249
 Moore, 167, 168, 256, 274
 Morgan, 235
 Morris, 193
 Mott, 286, 287
 Mount Airy, 184, 185, 188, 189, 191,
 193, 194, 196, 198
 Mount Saint Mary's School, 128
 Mount Vernon, 184
 Mount Vernon Place, 215
 Murfreesboro, battle of, 183
 Murray, 138, 141, 143, 146, 173
 "My Lord's Gift," 207, 208
 Myrtle Grove, 10

 Naval Acad., 15, 204, 221
 Needwood, 127
 Neth, 36, 42
 New Amsterdam, 258, 259
 Newcastle, 247, 248, 249, 255, 256,
 264, 265, 271, 291, 292, 293, 294
 Nichols, 227
 Nicholls, 99
 Noming Hall, 203

 Oakdale, 10
 Oakland, 124
 Oaklands, 93, 96, 99, 102
 Ogden, 284
 Ogle, 60, 61, 64, 66, 67, 70, 86, 87,
 200, 201, 202, 203, 204
 Old Windsor, 219
 Orleans, 282
 Oxford, Md., 226
 Oxford University, 61

 Paca, 1, 31, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44
 Paca House, 36
 Pardoc, 14

 Palmer, 254
 Pamunky, 10
 Parke, 273
 Parker, 100, 133, 143
 Parliament, 207
 Patapsco River, 166, 167, 168, 171
 Patterson, 123, 124, 125
 Patuxent River, 89, 101, 186, 187,
 235, 237, 242, 244
 Peach Blossoms, 226
 "Peggy Stewart," 142
 Pendenny, 221
 Pendleton, 88, 95
 Penn, 156, 268, 269
 Perry, 161, 163
 Peyton, 289
 Phelps, 112, 127, 128
 Physick, 243
 Pickering, 173
 Pickford, 198
 Pinkney, 7, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33
 Plain Dealing, 225, 226, 227, 228,
 229, 230, 231
 Plantagenets, 221
 Plater, 235, 237, 238, 239
 Plimhimmon, 10
 Plymouth, 182
 Poconoke, 226, 232
 Poluyanski, 219, 222
 Poplar Hill, 10
 Porter, 261
 Portland Manor, 116
 Portobello, 10
 Potomac River, 66
 Powell, 57, 194
 Powlett, 85
 Presque Isle, Lake Erie, 288
 Primrose, 42
 Prince George's Co., 68, 88, 91, 96,
 99, 101, 114, 116, 146, 184, 189,
 199, 202

INDEX

Printz, 177
 Pritchard, 101
 Providence, 152
 Provincial Conventions, 157
 Pryor, 260
 Pue, 173
 Puritan, 51, 52, 152

 Quaker, 92, 140, 156, 157, 280
 Quatrebeau, 45
 Queen Anne's Co., 10, 134, 157, 161,
 162, 165, 205, 209, 210, 211, 212,
 213, 215
 Queenstown, 209, 211, 212
 Queenstown Creek, 205, 207, 208

 Rand, 127
 Randall, 4, 25, 72, 73, 75, 76
 Randall House, 72, 75
 Ranelagh, 10
 Rastrick de, 177
 Ratcliffe Manor, 148, 149, 150, 151,
 162
 Read, 264, 265, 293
 Readbourne, 148, 157, 161, 162, 163, 164
 Read House, 264, 265
 Redemptorist Order, 116, 117
 Relay, 173
 Rewes, 242
 Richardson, 129, 141
 Ridgely, 1, 6, 23, 124, 131, 133, 134,
 135, 136, 173, 180, 220, 266, 267,
 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274,
 275, 280, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286,
 287, 288, 289, 290
 Ridgely House, 266, 267, 273, 274,
 281, 283, 290
 Ridout, 15, 24, 25, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64,
 65, 66, 67, 72, 77, 80, 86
 Ridout House, 60, 64, 72

Ringgold, 142
 Riverdale, 193
 Robb, 49
 Robbins, 128
 Robins, 148, 149, 162, 226
 Rodin, 50
 Rodney, 249, 256, 265, 271, 273, 274,
 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 283,
 284
 Rolling Road, 172
 Rose Hill, 10
 Ross, 69, 219
 Rousley, 186, 237, 238, 239
 Roubelle, 43, 44
 Rozier, 116
 Rutland, 104

 St. Ann's Church, 107
 St. Anthony's Chapel, 129
 St. Aubin, 164
 St. John's College, 181, 219, 243
 St. Jones' Creek, 251, 268
 St. Jones' Neck, 275
 St. Mary's Co., 10, 48, 116, 133, 178,
 219, 235, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244
 St. Matthew's Church, 129
 St. Michael's, 159
 St. Thomas' Church, 189
 Saint Anne's Church, 16
 Saint Anne's Parish, 187
 Saint Cuthbert's, 10
 Saint George's Presbyterian Church,
 292
 Saint Inigoes, 138
 Saint Margarets, 77
 Sandy Point, 77
 Sandy Spring, 103
 Satterlee, 235, 239
 Schaaf, 36, 43
 Scharf, 263, 272
 Scott, 61, 68, 69, 70, 71

---

INDEX

---

- Scott House, 68, 69, 71
Second Presbyterian Church, Phila., 261
Seth's Mills, 213
Severn River, 3, 37, 70, 107, 218, 219, 221
Sewall, 118
Sharpy, 8, 26, 60, 61, 63, 64, 66, 67,
69, 70, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 83, 84,
85, 86
Sharpe's Island, 228
Sheffy, 183
Shurmer, 268
Sherwood, 38
Shields, 285
Sisters of Notre Dame, 66, 71
Skidmore, 273
Smith, 264, 265, 285
Smyrna, 11
Snowden, 8, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94,
96, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104
Snowden Hall, 103
Somerset, 156, 232
Somerville, 238
Sons of Liberty, 21, 40, 142
Sothoron, 244
Sotterly, 235, 236, 239
South River, 220
South River Battalion, 35
Spa Creek, 17
Sprigg, 65, 146, 147, 173
Spring Garden, 135
Stamp Act, 22, 85, 142
Stamp Act Congress, 276
Stanley, 108
Star Spangled Banner, 219
State Assemblies, 273
Staunton, 127, 128
Stemmer, 8
Stenton, 248
Stephen, 48, 49
Sterrett, 215
Steuart, 147, 186, 191, 193, 194
Stewart, 65, 256, 291, 292
Stier, 191
Stockett, 25
Stockton, 256
Stony Point, 282
Story, 77, 87
Strangways, 62
Stuart, 134, 191, 193
Stuyvesant, 259
Success Farm, 10
Summer Hill, 220
Sussex Co., Del., 278
Swan, 5
Swann, 36, 42

Talbot Co., 10, 33, 41, 76, 140, 152,
155, 162, 164, 209, 212, 225, 227,
229, 251
Tankerville, 226
Tasker, 64, 200, 202
Taylor, 88, 95, 127
Thom, 205, 210
Thomas, 92, 93, 100, 102, 182, 183,
236, 237, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244,
293, 294
Thomas House, 293 ✓
Thompson, 127, 128
Thornton, 59
Three Graces of America, 111, 124
Tilden, 290
Tilghmann, 48, 134, 150, 162
Tilghman Fortune, 150
Tolley, 216
Tonoloway, 66
Towson, 131
Tred Avon River, 148, 225
Tred Haven, 156
Trent Hall, 244
Tubman, 244

INDEX

- Tucker, 137
 Tudor Hall, 10
 Tuesday Club, 57
 Tulip Hill, 6, 138, 139, 140, 141,
 142, 143, 144, 267
 Turkey Park, 150
 Tyson, 103

 Union Line, 299
 United Colonies of America in Congress Assembled, 277
 University of Pa., 181
 Upper Marlboro, 183

 Van Courtlandt, 258
 Van Courtlandt Manor, 258
 Van Dyke, 248, 249, 291, 292
 Vasa, 177
 Verplank, 259
 Victoria, Queen of England, 159
 Vincent, 258
 Vineyard, the, 76
 Vining, 268, 271, 272, 279, 280, 281,
 282, 283, 284
 Vonschroder, 86, 90, 95

 Wales, 84
 Wallace, 180
 Wallis, 211, 213, 216
 Walnut Grange, 93
 Wardridge, 270
 Warfield, 11, 21, 47, 76, 94, 99, 104,
 113, 120, 121, 220
 Washington, Booker T., 159
 Washington Geo., 23, 41, 42, 47, 55,
 65, 80, 88, 117, 122, 128, 173, 180,
 184, 185, 191, 265
 Washington's Life Guards, 179
 Wasp, the, 269
 Waterloo, 124
 Waters, 100
 Watkins, 35

 Wayne, 282, 283
 Weightman, 183
 Welcome, The, 269
 Wellesley, Marquis of, 124
 Wellington, 124
 West, 152
 Westonholme or Wostenholme, 63,
 64
 West River, 6, 100, 138, 139, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 168, 171, 267
 White, 135, 136
 White Banks, 208
 Whitehall, 8, 25, 26, 66, 67, 77, 78,
 80, 81, 83, 86, 87
 White House, 159, 185
 Whitham, 134
 Whitridge, 182, 183
 Whittingham, 214
 Whyte, 33
 Wilcox, 196
 William and Mary's College, 237
 Wilmington, Del., 261, 289, 283, 284, 285, 292
 Wilson, 194
 Wilson House, 11
 Wiltshire, 146
 Winans Cove, 190
 Winthrop, 120
 Wolfe, 70
 Woodward, 199, 200, 202
 Worthington, 9, 25, 42, 174, 216,
 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 223, 271
 Worthington Valley, 9, 216
 Wright, 102, 205, 206, 209, 210
 Wye House, 19, 23, 41, 43, 134, 152,
 153, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 169
 Wye Island, 76
 Wye Mills, 219
 Wye River, 154
 Wynhoop, 274, 281

 Yale College, 261

